AN INCIDENT OF THE CHICAGO FIRE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

The coolest pair of lovers were they.
—This Miss De Green and Mr. De Gray,
That ever had walked that sinuous way
Which those who trifle, and those who trust,
Have always traveled, and always must.
She loved De Gray for his handsome teeth,
And he loved her for her handsome hair,
Which hung in a shining golden wreath,
As light and free as the air.

And so, at the close of every day,
As the little stars were blinking away
With all their might, this Miss De Green,
In a deep bay window might be seen,
With a happy look, which seemed to say
That some one was coming—perhaps De Gray;
For Miss De Green lived down in the souther-
Ly part of the town, and he in the other.

The heroine's pa, or old De Green,
Was a fine old chap with a portly m'en,
And ran a first-class sausage machine
In a very handy part of the town,
Not too far up nor too far down;
And never was known to pass an erroni-
Ous judgment on a style of Bologna.
This being the case, 'twas surely meet
That he should live on a stylish street,
In a stylish house that would'nt demean
The high position of old De Green.

This Miss De Green, the gossips say,
Was always careful that young De Gray
Should never exactly know the way
In which her pa had raised so much
Hard cash, and railroad bonds and such;
And, without regard to bonds et cetera,
This young De Gray still thought no better a
Wife would ever, perhaps, be found;
And so he continued to "sail around"
Until his efforts were duly crowned
With high success, and the sequel is,
His teeth were hers and her hair was his!

That night was the terrible Sunday night
When the city blazed anew with light,
When hungry flames swept through the air,
And scattered ruin everywhere,
Right there in the foreground might be seen
The stately front of old De Green
All melting away like a tub of butter,
And streams from a dozen hose were utter-
Ly useless; they had come too late
To save De Green from the common fate,
And as the brown stone front went down,
Poor Miss De Green rushed through the town
Minus her beautiful head of hair;
For everything was in ashes where
She left it, hung on a rosewood chair—
Yes, left it there, forever too late!
Such was the sad decree of Fate.

That night De Gray retired to rest
With heart of one supremely blessed,
And joy that couldn't be quite expressed;
But when the loud alarm first broke
Upon the air, De Gray awoke,
And seeing such a blaze and smoke,
With one great bound he reached the window,
Upset the glass his teeth were in, so
Hurried was he; but he reached the scene
Too late to see poor Miss De Green;
Then, overcome with grief, De Gray
Turned silently and walked away,
And reached his house all pale and wan,
To find it burned, his teeth all gone!

That night two forms were seen to meet
Upon the wild, disordered street;
One had no teeth, one had no hair;
Each gazed at each in wild despair,
Then, with one last look, turned away—
Alas, De Green! alas, De Gray!

CHAPTER XXXV.

THE NUNNERY AT NARM.

"Is not this beautiful?" said Raymond Garton, waving his hand towards the valley spread out before them, with its sunny vineyards and running streams. "Is not this the Italy you have so often dreamt of, Lillian? They were standing on the porch of the tiny village hostel, finishing to take one glance at the cameo of beauty before they entered. She turned her eyes to his black, restless ones, wearily.

"It is very beautiful," she said simply, with a sigh that added plainly—"but the long desired fruit has turned to ashes in my mouth."

"You could be happy here, could you not?" he murmured. "You would forget your sorrow amidst these glorious hills, and glean peace from that picture nature has painted with such rich colors at your feet?" He spoke softly, with a tremulous eagerness in his voice, like the sough of the north wind. She sighed wearily again, and her hands clasped together with a movement of pain. Forget! How could she forget?

"I am tired," she said, sadly. "I am weary of life. What is there left for me to live or hope for?"

He turned his eyes away from her, fearless, sorrowful ones, and looked towards the white hill shimmering in the sunset.

"Poor Lillian!" he said. "Come, let us go within. We will stay here for a day or two; it is very beautiful and quiet, and the climate will suit you. You must soon get well and try and forget. Poor girl."

Since they had reached the village he had lost no opportunity of expressing his pity for, nor of speaking of the exceeding beauty and quietude of the place, always with the softest voice and the utmost pitying gaze.

It seemed as if he wished to keep the wound the supposed faithlessness of Leonard had made in her breast always open and smarting, and then to point to some undefined peace and rest that lay within her reach. Although she was conscious of this, she did not know then his aim and object in doing so; she learnt after to her cost.

The little hostelry where they were staying was situated by the side of the only cart road that ran through the village, and possessed the picturesque beauty of the wayside inns of Italy.

Clusters of grapes rubbed their bloom against the weather-stained wood walls, and the clematis and mountain roses scented the air with their perfume, as they twined round the rustic porch, and made the little garden with bright patches of crimson and yellow.

Lillian would sit on a sofa beside the open window, and see the few peasants, in their picturesque dress, trudge along the road, or lean against the hot walls, like Newfoundland dogs, basking in the sun.

The whole of the second day she did not leave her station, and never took her eyes from the road, save to raise them to the nunnery on the hill, that seemed, though shadowy as yet, a sort of refuge and resting place. And Raymond Garton glided in and out the house with something of his old manner, though the restlessness that had been born upon the little river steamer—still clung to him and showed itself in his ever moving eyes, that were eager, anxious, smiling, and sometimes sparkling with some inward emotion, but never still.

And so the days came, lingered and vanished, and Lillian laid beside the window, with her hands folded in her lap, watching the peasant girls as they tripped down the inn, and wondering if any of them had loved like her and lost, and whether the pain throbbing deadly at her heart would ever grow numbed, and leave her at peace and forgetfulness.

On the third evening Raymond was leaning against the window at her side, his arms folded and his eyes bent upon the ground, when Lillian said, languidly:—

"Mr. Garton, see there!"

He looked up at her exclamation and saw three sisters of mercy passing down the road, clothed from head to foot in their black robes, with white hood and linen bands. They passed along with slow steps towards their house on the hill.

"Yes, they are the Sisters of Narm," said Mr. Garton.

"How calm and placid they look; they have no care, no trouble; their life is one long story of well doing, of blessing and peace."

At that moment one turned round and Lillian saw a sweet, pale face filled with a sublime calm and serenity that seemed to bring her ease even at a single glance.

"Mr. Garton," she said suddenly, almost eagerly, "do you think the one who turned round just then would stop and speak to me?"

His eyes sparkled—"I am sure she would, my poor girl," he said, as eagerly as herself.

And he had jumped out of the window before she could add another word. She saw him take off his hat and bow respectfully to the sister of mercy, and then, after a moment's conference with her companions, the black-robed woman, with her sweet face, hurried back with him.

"Do you wish to see me, lady?" she said, in a sweet voice.

"Yes," said Lillian, in her weak Italian. "May you stay and talk to me a little while?" she said, timidly.

"Oh yes," instantly replied the sister, in a low voice and with a loving smile. "We are sent to tend the sick."

"Ah," said Lillian, looking disappointed, "but I am not ill now, I am nearly well."

"I meant not sick in body only," murmured the sister, "but sick at heart also."

Lillian's eyes filled with tears. "Then you may stay a little with me," she said, in a low voice, "for I am very, very sick at heart."

Raymond, who had listened to every word with eager ears, but a calm, serene face, silently drew forward a chair beside the couch, and then hurried to leave he room, looking back as he reached the door, with a twitching at his lips and a glance in his eyes that spoke of the anxiety of his soul.

Surely heaven was playing into his hands!

For a minute or two the sister of mercy sat silent, her eyes fixed upon the road, and Lillian searching her serene and calmly placid face.

"Are you happy?" she asked suddenly, looking wistfully for the reply.

"Yes," was the instant rejoinder, as if the listener knew the thought before it was uttered. "Very happy, and I have known sorrow like yourself, lady." And the brown eyes smiled pitifully.

Lillian's head drooped. "Ah, shall I ever be able to say as much!"

"Ay and more," said the sister, softly, "if you will but seek peace where it is to be found."

Lillian's eyes asked, "Where?"

The sister raised her hand and pointed with a smile to the building on the hill:—

"There and here," and she lifted a carved crucifix from her side, held it for one moment before Lillian's eyes, kissed it reverently and laid it on her lap.

Lillian sighed.

"I am a Protestant," she said, simply.

"So was I once," was the reply, as gently as before.

"You were a Protestant?" repeated Lillian, opening her eyes with languid surprise. "Tell me—forgive me! I have no right to pry into your private feelings, but—"

"There is nothing to forgive, sister," how sweet the name sounded—how soothing to the poor girl's ears. Was the word altogether a slip of the tongue, or intentional?)

"I will tell you if it will do you any good. My name is Agnes, Sister Agnes. I, like yourself, was a Protestant and lived in the world. And I—loved. Ah, you start, sister; I am not surprised. It seems to me that all women's sorrow and suffering spring from that word—Love.

"I loved, and loved madly, with all my heart and soul, and—can you not guess, sister?—I loved where I should have hated, and he who held my heart in his hand crushed it and flung it from him. He was faithless as the world itself, sister.

"I have known sorrow. I have wandered through the world for ten years, joining in its laughter, and making merry at its feasts, and tried to cover the wound, but hide it as I would it burned and burned until the pain became unbearable.

"I could not forget! I heard his name in the music of the concert and ball. I saw his face in the midst of the gay multitude, and beside my bed at night! His face! Ah, Maria! his face! so handsome, so good looking, and yet a mask only to a being of deceit!"

Lillian sat listening, slightly bent towards the fair speaker, whose pale face was slightly flushed, and whose eyes were sparkling with the emotion the memory of the past called up.

With lips slightly parted and trembling hands clasped together:—

"Sister, I suffered terribly! I could find no rest, no peace. I grew thin and ill as you are now, and they said I should die, and I should had I not by accident lit upon this place and found peace within those walls," and she pointed with simple solemnity to the nunnery.

Lillian sighed a breath of relief. She had been listening with closest attention, scarcely breathing.

"And you became a nun!"

"No, not a nun yet," was the reply. "It was my wish to do what little good I could before I retired forever from the world which had been so cruel to me. I am a sister of mercy now; I shall be a nun by Christmastide."

And her face lit up with a smile that had nothing of earthly joy in it. Lillian's eyes filled with tears.

"And then you will be at peace," she breathed.

"Yes, sister, and so may you if you wish it. The Church holds out open arms to all, but especially to the sick and sorrowful. The Blessed Virgin waits with trembling fingers to clasp you to her heart, she watches with tearful eyes your struggles on the road. Come, come, and be at rest!"

And bending forward, the fanatic, for her early sorrow, her sunsequent training and early associations had driven her to that, held up once more the crucifix before the sad eyes of the despairing girl.

How sweet the prospect seemed to exchange this life of weariness and sorrow for one of quietness and repose, where memory should be washed away in a river of good deeds and devotion! Her lips trembled, she looked round for her guardian—what would he say—then stretched out her hand reverently to take the crucifix, had lifted it half way, with awed humility, to her lips, when the sudden clatter of horses' hoofs broke the sunny stillness, and a traveler dashed at headlong pace up to the door of the house.

She looked up and saw the landlord, followed by the household, run out with respectful cries of welcome to greet the new arrival. Saw the peasant at the gate humbly doff his hat and the women standing in their white aprons at the door courtesy to the ground, and then, listening, heard a voice she knew cry in grave accents:—

"Ah, Adolph, I am back, you see, cannot leave beloved Narm for long together. Take care of Zephyr, and tell the dame I am come."

And then as he moved towards the door she uttered a low cry, for she recognized Lord St. Aubyn.

Scarcely had the cry left her lips—the cause of it had not heard it nor seen her—when Raymond Garton glided into the room, and darting to the window, pulled down the blind with a sudden jerk.

"Hush, hush!" he said, hoarsely.

"Do not speak, do not move!" And then he went to the door, opened it, as a signal for Sister Agnes to depart, and closing it quickly, locked it.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

IN PURSUIT.

Poor Joseph Bolton! It is hard work hunting for anything when there's a good scent and a smooth country, but when you have not a vestige of an idea as to whether the game has gone north, south, east or west, and the country is composed of stiff bits of wood and rail, it is terrible work.

For three weeks the unfortunate dealer rushed hither and thither—to Paris, to Rouen, to all the seaport places and great termini, was tossed from porter to porter like an inquiring shuttlecock, referred from office to office, badgered by captains, stewards, station masters, private man-hunters, until the beaver on his hat was nearly worn off by incessant nervous brushing, and his rather comfortably stout person was reduced to a slimness that spoke aloud of numerous disappointments, vexations and hunting troubles.

And then, after three weeks' incessant traveling, he returned to London and South Audley street, bearing with him not one jot of comfort for the man he had grown to regard with an affection half fraternal, half paternal.

Meanwhile Leonard Cranley had been undergoing suffering exactly similar to that borne so patiently by Lillian.

Utter mental and bodily prostration had followed the terrible outburst which had resulted in Joseph Bolton's start; and he had laid, gradually weaker day by day, under the effect of the drug which had been administered—he at last could not help concluding—by the clergyman who had made the girl who had fled from him his wife.

Perhaps it was a merciful dispensation that robbed both Lillian and him of consciousness during those long weeks. Had the brain been free to think and ponder over the tangled skein of events that had so mysteriously worked such evil for them, reason itself might have gone with the strength that had fled and left them both hovering on the brink of that shadow land, which is Death.

The doctor, a Mr. Farnham, stuck by Leonard faithfully, as he had promised, watching beside him almost day and night.

And Tim, too, who had from the first regarded "Mr. Leonard" with perhaps more affection than he deigned to bestow on any one, would sit by the bed with his jackdaw on his shoulder, and watch the restless writhings of the unconscious artist.

It was a hard time for both the boyand the doctor, but a harder time even yet came, when Leonard opened his eyes and his mind for the first time. And after regarding the two faces—three rather, for Scratch was perched on the foot of the bed, staring with shining, devil-dark eyes with a feeble, puzzled stare, broke out into a groan of remembrance, and hid his face in his hands.

It was hard work keeping him quiet and still, for every now and then an exclamation of passionate impatience of his new feebleness and impotence would burst the bonds of restraint with—

"Doctor, when will you let me get up! man! I am burning to death with impatience, lying here when every moment is precious. How soon! How soon!"

"Two years!" would be the gruff reply, with a kindly smile, "if you go on like that. God bless me! the very thing absolutely to pull you around is sleep, and that you won't take. I'm doing all I can to bring you round, and so is Tim, and so is this infernal bird here—for he helps with his confounded croak—but you are doing all your best to throw yourself back!"

"Forgive me!" would be the reply, in a grave voice, rendered low by pain. "If you knew—— !"

"Ah, but I do know!" said the doctor. "It is hard for you, once so strong and lithe, to lie there like a wounded stag; but you'll be there like a dead one, if you don't lie still."

With which concise summing up the worthy man, inspired by a benevolence of a first cousin relationship to Joseph, wound up the argument and somewhat quieted his patient—if the word patient be not a misnomer for Leonard.

And so the weary weeks rolled by, as slowly as a wagon with a drag, and at last Joseph returned.

He came in quietly, looking rather thinner, as I have said, and exceedingly nervous, brushing his almost napless hat with his dusty coat sleeve. He was mopping his brow with his pocket handkerchief, and stood behind Leonard's chair.

He had come in while Leonard was sleeping, propped up in a great arm chair, and had trodden on tip-toe in obedience to the doctor's uplifted finger.

Leonard looked up after a few minutes, and started with an eager cry and caught his arm.

Joseph interpreted the cry rightly, and in answer shook his head.

Leonard's head dropped upon his breast for a moment and then he raised it, with a despair that was piteous in the extreme.

"No trace!"

"Not a hair's, dear Leonard!" replied the traveler; "not a hair's. I have scoured every nook and corner of the continent round, not stopping to rest, even, but they had gone, leaving no trace! Once I thought I had scent of them. A lady and gentleman—the lady evidently ill, had been seen entering a first-class carriage of the train to Paris, but the guard could not remember them, nor the ticket-collector, nor any one, and at last I discovered that they had doubled back and so got rid of the trace entirely. I've tried, dear Leonard, but——"

Leonard, who had been listening eagerly, pressed his arm gratefully.

"Joseph," he said, gravely, "few men have found so great a friend in their need. Do not think me ungrateful. I owe you more than my life for your goodness to me. You look ill, tired, worn, and all for me. Doctor, I never thought ill of men. Now I begin to think that there are some on earth who have all the greatness of the heroes of the past."

He tried to speak cheerfully and swallow up himself in his heartfelt gratitude to the little man at his side, but his voice faltered.

"Hush, hush!" said Joseph, while the doctor nodded his head and remarked gruffy, but with a tone of satisfaction, that he—meaning Joseph—was a brick. "I would do more for you than that little, Leonard. But how ill you must have been, my poor boy," he said, in a low voice, taking the thin hand and looking anxiously at the wan face.

"So the doctor says," said Leonard, with a quiet smile. Then half petulantly, "aye, tied hand and foot here—"

"That's how he goes on pretty near all day," broke in Tim, in an injured tone, appealing to the company in general, Scratch in particular.

"All the while you've been away, sir, he's been grumbling at his legs and limbs, because he could'nt get out and join you. I tell him, so does the doctor there," extending one finger to Mr. Farnham, "that he won't get on his pins again if he ain't quiet; but God bless you, sir, he won't lay still more than half an hour together."

As if in corroboration Scratch crowed dismally, and the doctor grunted. Joseph looked troubled.

Leonard's eyes said, "I have not given up hope even yet, but—but if she is lost to you, would it grieve you much?"

The artist turned.

"Lost," he said, "what do you mean? How can she be lost unless she wishes to be so herself, and I will not believe her so heartless and cruel, so mad—so—no, no, there is some dark mystery at the bottom of all this, which I will fathom when I regain the use of these weak limbs of mine," and he looked impatiently at his thin hands.

Joseph Bolton shook his head and turned to the window.

"You never can understand a woman," he said sadly, withsome little hesitation, "for the simple reason that they never understand themselves. They fancy they are in love, fancy it so really that they will marry on the strength of it, and then they get the wedding ring on their frail fingers, cry their hearts out when it is too late, and say they never loved at all."

"You wrong all women, Bolton!" replied Leonard. "You wrong her most of all. I will never believe she does not love me until—"

"Until what?" said Bolton, coming up to him and laying his hand gently upon his arm.

"Until you tell me so!"

Leonard remained silent.

Presently Joseph Bolton said:—

"Will you let me see the note?"

They had both been thinking of the same thing, so that this question did not surprise Leonard in the least. Without a word he took the note from his bosom and handed it to Bolton.

Joseph looked at it carefully. "It is her writing?" he said, interrogatively.

"It is hers," Leonard replied.

"You are sure?"

He looked up with a grim smile. "Could I be mistaken?"

"Ah, no," replied Joseph. "Do you notice how the writing trembles?"

Leonard bent his head.

"And that she laid a stress upon the lines, 'I am under no coercion whatever.'"

"Yes, yes," said Leonard, grimly.

"The shaken letters and the emphasis upon her assertion of free will, almost prove to me that she was not so free as she herself imagined, or would have you think."

Leonard rose eagerly and crawled to the window with a groan of weakness, but a flash of intense interest in his eyes. "Yes, go on! what is it you think?"

"Candidly, my dear Leonard, I think Lillian Garton, or Grantley"—Leonard flushed and crept back to his chair, and Bolton stayed at the window and went on—"that she was romantic, full of sentiment, and ready to do anything that savored of the heroic, and that falling romantically in love with your handsome face, she did it, and was wrought upon so greatly as to feel sorry afterwards. That is what I think, but I know that view pains you, so I try to think another way."

Joseph Bolton paused a moment and then took out his pocket-handkerchief and blew his nose in an apologetic way that spoke volumes.

"Go on," said Leonard, in a low voice.

"Do you remember dying into a passion with me some time ago because I happened to hint, that is to say, that is a——"

"Joseph," he said. "I never knew you had suffered so. Forgive me the hard words I spoke to you that morning. You have, indeed, cause to hate Raymond Garton, but you must acquit Lillian of all blame. She is neither heartless nor vain. Heartless! I saw her cry over a wounded sparrow!"

Joseph smiled sadly, "but many a woman will cry over a sparrow's broken limb, and laugh at a man's broken heart," he said, quietly. "But I feel that you are right, Leonard, and that Miss Lillian was free from blame."

"I would answer for her with my life!" said Leonard, earnestly.

"And now for the moral of my story, Mr. Leonard——" Leonard interrupted him:—

"Joseph, why do you call me 'Mr?' Call me plain Leonard; if there be any superiority it is on your side; you are a better man than I am, Joseph, and have been a friend in need. Let me beg of you to drop that mark of respect which is not my due. I am Leonard to you."

The picture dealer's eye glistened.

"Leonard—if you wish it," he said, "there is a difference, though you would destroy it. You are a gentleman, I am a picture dealer, you are—"

Leonard raised his hand.

"I am, or have been, a fool and a spendthrift, and you are neither, Joseph; are those qualifications for a gentleman?"

Joseph shook his head at the bitter reply, but said:—

"No, no, you judge yourself too harshly. But if you wish it I will call you Leonard. Now for the moral of my story. Raymond Garton, with the exception of gambling, has led you into all manner of expenses, haven't he, now? There was the horse, the club, the stall at the opera, and the heap of other things which required a fortune to keep going, but which he led you into."

"I see, I see," said Leonard with a troubled face, "but where was his object?"

Joseph shook his head. "Ah, if we only knew that the door of the mystery would be unlocked. You see, Raymond Garton is like a cat, he's as soft as velvet, but there's claws beneath his smooth paw. He's full of mystery. I heard during my time that he had a distinct establishment at Sydenham way, and that a sort of gambling soirees were held there three or four times a week. If so I can understand where the money came from to keep things going, but where was his motive, that's what puzzles me!"

And Joseph Bolton wiped his honest face with his red pocket handkerchief with a truly puzzled look.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

THE LAST BLOW.

Leonard shook his head. "I have thought over every word, every event that occurred since I first saw Raymond Garton, but I can find no clue, no object point on the whole. Everything seems to me straightforward, he was pleasant—"

"Ay, pleasant!" muttered Joseph. "I saw him smiling sweetly the day after my boy's death!"

"Ever candid, he made no secret of his plan with regard to Lillian."

"What do you mean?" enquired Joseph. "You never told him you loved her?"

"No, no," said Leonard, "but he told me a few evenings before, that he intended to marry her to Crowndiamonds, the old earl, and spoke so candidly and openly that I——"

Joseph looked puzzled. "Are you sure that he never favored your suit with Lillian?"

"Certainly he did not; would he have told me what he did if he had wished to give me hope?"

"That's true," acquiesced Joseph Bolton, with a sigh, "the whole affair is a mystery. Have you ever thought, Leonard," he said, suddenly, "of the assertion of the doctor, that you have been poisoned or drugged?"

"Often," replied Leonard, "and can come to no other conclusion than that he was mistaken. I must have taken something that must have disagreed with me, or, more likely still, the excitement and the walk in the rain did the work. Think. What motive could the clergyman who married us have for poisoning me or both of us? none, none whatever. No, I am sure that it was a delusion on the part of the doctor."

"You did not think so at the time," said Joseph.

"I was mad," said Leonard, sadly, "and ready to snatch at any solution, however improbable, of the mystery that is a mystery still."

And he arose and walked painfully up and down the room.

"Sit down, do, Leonard," urged Bolton, nervously. "You are as weak as a new born babe, and yet you pace up and down like a wild tiger. Oh, do sit down."

Leonard dropped into a chair again and hid his face in his hands. Suddenly he looked up.

"Joseph!" he said, jumping up, "I have never been to Walmer street yet. For what we know to the contrary there may be some communication, some letter waiting there. I must go at once!"

"Not at once," remonstrated Joseph. "Not at once, wait until the morning. Wait."

"No! another half hour. Pray my good friend, do not deny me this. Send Tim for a cab and let me go at once!"

And Leonard jumped up and down, as was his wont when agitated.

Joseph, when he saw it was no use, went to the door and dispatched Tim. They rode in silence through the streets and in silence passed up the picture que stairs.

Leonard's hand trembled a little as he inserted the key in the lock of the studio door, and he hesitated a moment ere he entered. How still it all looked. The dust lying thickly upon the table and knick knacks; the lay figure stretching out its wooden arm in the same attitude he had left it.

The shining armor lying on the floor as he had tumbled it down the day before the clandestine marriage and the palette and brush resting against the easel ready for the hand that had deserted it, and, ah, yes! there was the picture turned to the wall, the face of the girl who had sworn to love him, but who had fled from him ere the words had died into silence. He walked up to the table and looked at the letter box. Hastily turning over the letters he seized one whose writing he knew at once.

Joseph saw him pale, and walked to his side. Leonard hastily broke open the envelope and something fell from it on the floor. It was a broken wedding ring.

For a moment he stood staring with white face and speechless lips at the small circle, then his eyes flashed, a flood of crimson dyed his face, and crying:—

"Heartless woman I take your symbol at its worth! Henceforth cursed be he who mentions your name in my hearing, and cursed be I if I call you wife again."

He crushed the broken ring with his heel and ground it into the carpet.

MODERN LETTER WRITER.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
By W. E. M., of Baltimore.

FROM A RESIDENT AT PARIS DURING THE SIEGE.

DEAR FRIEND.—We're having the very jolliest kind of time here imaginable. I stop at an English hotel, kept by a Mexican. Other people are troubled for something to eat, but we have the finest table, daily, that I ever sat at. The following is the bill of fare:—

Rat-a-plan soup,	Cat sup,
Fish; the roach in salad,	Kitten-lea,
Mice-ellaneous entrees,	Dog-fish,
Cat-bird on toast,	Cat-fish.

The proprietor, who stutters, also gives us occasionally "a pup-pup-potatoe pie," as he calls it in his stammering way. This, you see, is an excellent variety. As for eating our domestic animals and vermin, it is an absurdity. Don't credit such reports.

Truly, etc., ——.

LETTER FROM A TELEGRAPH OPERATOR.

TO MONEYPENNY.—Correct. Yes. No. To-morrow. Excuse verbosity. BLACK.

FROM A PARTICULAR OLD LADY.

DEAR SIR.—I take this opportunity to let you let you and hoping the same which I find the yellow band-box and blue cover a red veil in the cord around the top corner of the bridge and a young man said he would send me for the loss I could not about a lone widow aged the stage shook and the young woman at the stand with cakes red ribbon which was snapplah and oblige yours truly, ——.

FROM AN AUTOR. (Not technical at all.)

DEAR SIR.—The flash of the first will not allow me now to count the house which is necessary, especially in summer circuit, on account of fly by night twisters, and if the ghost don't walk, everything is bound to go up in a balloon. Do you cause the house? Therefore I want your help. Heavies one of the best lines—no third groove utility, I can assure you—and I can't lose it, as I must if I am not able to see the words so as to soak 'em in and go on dead letter, according to habit. Truly yours, ——.

FROM A DIPLOMATIST.

HONORED SIR.—You ask me concerning the restoration of the marital question. The matter is plain; must she given be up or not? I take the view that the absolute the less is proven; and up in this I base all succeeding ideas. It is, of course, necessary in everything to begin with a foundation. What is the essence of government? There, as you perceive, lies the matter in, to use an original phrase, a nutshell. Therefore, all we must keep to this point. Am I sufficiently plain?

With assurances of distinguished consideration, etc., ——.

LETTER FROM MR. GREELEY.

DEAR SIR.—It is a lie—an infernal lie. The man who would dare utter an assertion of the kind is a born devil. It is not my custom, as you are aware, to use bad language, and I wish to be even tempered and even humble in speaking of this man. But I cannot refrain from saying that of all the blackguards and dirty scoundrels, etc., etc. Yours, &c.

Mr. Greeley paid "this man" a visit not long since. The interview was affecting. Horace would have wept but he had forgotten his handkerchief before leaving New York.

LETTER FROM A PRINTER.

DEAR WIFE.—Since I have been here I have been doing well. How are you all at home? I suppose by this time you have put our baby in small caps. Do you remember our quarrel upon that subject? But it is dead matter now and fit for no place but a lame galley. It would be cruel to run it in here. But once we were very emphatic—every syllable we uttered was set in italics, yet, I repeat, I ought to be able to find copy enough for this little issue without snooping over old text, eh? I have to run to the salt cans, and always did. We shall both be under the stone some day, and we should live happily while we can. If difficulty come we must be ready to face it together. There are not two spaces in the world, I hope, to, dear. At the end we shall be proud to show a clean proof. So to rejoin you I shall be in our native city as our champion can stick twenty sem. Your loving husband, ——.

FROM A PROFESSIONAL GENTLEMAN.

DEAR MOLL.—My wife is actually soaked with the brine. Why don't you come to me? When a bloke gets down on his luck and gets in quod that's the way—he's deserted. To think as often as we lagged the loiters together, the sugar we've pulled, the tick we've lifted, the sand we've wet, and now for you to cut me like this—it's crushin' of a man's gizzard, that's what it is!

Yours truly, ——.

FROM A TELEGRAPH OPERATOR DURING CONFINEMENT.

MY NOBLE LORDS AND SENATORS.—This globe is square. You have my proposition. Give me the consent to cut off the hair of the Africans in the parts of their country undiscovered by Livingstone and I will undertake to relieve the preponderance on that side of this ongoing world. But don't keep me shut up here all the time. Don't do that. I am patient, I know, but no patience is exhaustless. Some day I shall produce my finger nails—and then you will see. I have not yet spent the copper, I think. It refines the soul of the heart, good brethren. Apply it by means of cracked ice I orings to your very toes. That's why I see what noses can do. And then try the pepper with those savage Africans. They will refuse, perhaps; but that might be expected. Only do not forget to count the grains and to give him a very frosty day. Come back and set me free. Honor me—exalt me—give me what is due for my best years in this building. I do not call it asylum. No, heartless friends, I do not. I know the price of your yellow grass too well. But the bolts will fly back, although they are not messenger pigeons, which always fly back. See what the Venerable Bede says upon this. Farewell. The King of ostriches forgives and blesses. I now add orings. Keep the pepper very dry.

NEARLY BURIED TO DEATH IN HIS COFFIN.—James Hickey, of Birmingham, Pa., narrowly escaped being buried alive one day last week. He had small pox of a bad type, and becoming worse and worse, he finally, as his friends supposed, expired. The remains were not kept long, the friends being afraid of the disease. Arrangements were made for the funeral, and the coffin was placed in the hearse. On reaching the cemetery the attention of the driver of the hearse was attracted by a noise in the coffin, and he made it known to the pallbearers. The coffin was taken out, and the lid was taken off, and Hickey immediately raised up terrified, as were all those around. He was taken home, and at last accounts was recovering.

A MUSICAL young lady says that a composer may very properly make overtures to anybody.

TO THE MEMORY OF MICHAEL PHELAN.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

Put up the cue. The game is done—
If lost—then lost; if won—well won.
We may not tell, as yet, the score,
We only know that all is o'er;
That every shot with skill was played,
That every point was fairly made,
And that the great, good Referee
Will judge with kindly charity.

Put up the cue. From out the game
That won for him a world-wide fame
A deeper lesson we may draw—
A something of diviner law—
Than that unequalled, matchless skill,
That made the balls slaves of his will.

His life was all a well-played game:
No word of censure or of blame
Can fall from any lips to-day,
To cloud his spotless memory;
And tho' oftimes the balls ran ill,
And made the game seem doubtful—still
With manly courage and staunch will
He played his ball from first to last;
And now, at length, when all is past,
And we may pause in rest the cue,
Shall any deem the game as lost?

Ah no! If kindly, goodly deeds—
If noble acts—like golden seeds
That germinate in truth and love—
Count ought upon the score above—
If firmness, independence, truth,
If spotless life from earliest youth,
If sympathy in each good cause—
If fame's proud trumpet—man's applause,
That world-wide heralded his name—
If these count ought in life's true game,
Will any say 'tis lost? Will you?
Ah no! And thus put up the cue!

VANDYKE BROWN

IN THE AUDIENCE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

Mirabel does justice to "a first night" in words of rapture that Charles Lamb long afterward might have used. But to the proper observer there are two plays in the theatre of an evening—that which is performed on the stage, and that which enacts itself extemporaneously in the audience. To enjoy all of the latter I have ever made it a rule to go early; for sometimes, a very interesting prologue takes place at the doors. The sight of the motley crowd squeezing up to the box office, the bustling there, the paying out of the admission money, the disputes with the uncompromising ticket seller (who is invariably the most rigidly imperturbable of human beings) the rush for programmes, the choice of seats, form altogether an exhibition not to be witnessed anywhere else.

The arm chairs now in use are inventions, it must be granted, most invaluable. Everybody has his allowance of space and the surety of not being intruded upon. Once settled in your throne, you feel pretty safe; all that you have now to dread is an unpleasant neighbor. How closely you eye each person who passes down the aisle! But your primary horror is of that inevitable old gentleman who attends the theatre but seldom, and is consequently ignorant of its rules. He begins his evening by tormenting the usher. He dawdles down to the front of the orchestra, and, notwithstanding he sees "Taken" staring him in the face all around, he sinks into the choicest spot he can find. Usher touches him on the arm several times and at last only attracts his attention by giving him a violent nudge.

"All these places are secured, sir. If you haven't a coupon for the orchestra you must go further back."

"I paid 75 cents," reasons the old gentleman. "They told me that would take me all over the house."

"But these seats are taken. You pay a dollar for these."

"But they told me at the door 75 cents——"

"Yes; but a certain space is always reserved in advance, at an additional charge. You must move back."

"At the door," persists the unconquerable old person "they said 75 cents——"

Usher leads him off by force; but is by no means rid of him yet. He can't be seated elsewhere with any accommodation whatever. He moves here and there, falling over people's legs, knocking down umbrellas and hats, hunting for programmes, and makes himself the object of more profanity than should fall to the lot of any human being in the world on a single day.

The drunken man is the next nuisance. First of all, he poisons the surrounding atmosphere with the exhalations of thoroughly moistened skin; he uses very bad language, to the interruption of your hearing of the play; he leans on the seat before him, and blows his breath down the back of the lady sitting there; he is continually staggering out for more refreshment, and coming back again just when you think he has left for good; finally, he gets very drunk and raises a disturbance. This necessitates his expulsion, and as the officers are carrying him away, he struggles and wipes his muddy boots all over your coat, and alarms you, perhaps, by brandishing a loaded revolver.

The third nuisance is that accommodating creature, the communicative man. He has seen the play before several times—knows it by heart, in fact. He supplies you with a summary of the action before the curtain rises; he tells you in advance what everybody on the stage is going to do next; he repeats, with great exactness, the dialogue of the performers as it progresses; he helps to work up the climax, and just as you are wondering with intense interest what the catastrophe will be, he hurries to your relief by explaining all. I remember, years ago, when I first saw "The Ticket of Leave Man" performed. One of these agreeable persons was sitting by me, and at the time when Hawkshaw enters, disguised as the navvy when, in short, I was in an exquisite fever of suspense, not suspecting in the remotest degree the turn of the plot, this pleasant neighbor of mine revealed the startling denouement with an expression of happiness in being able to serve me, that no words could describe. I threw my arms around his neck and cursed him till I couldn't utter another oath.

The fourth nuisance is the stranger, who has no programme and is not acquainted with the names of the actors. He asks a question every instant. If a performer leaves the stage but two minutes, when he returns, the stranger, with a fresh show of interest, whispers, "And who is this?" So it goes till, in desperation, you sing out at each appearance, with the monotony of habit—"Here's Wallack!" "This is Gilbert;" "Now comes Rockwell;" "And Fisher is entering," till the curtain falls.

But defend me from the fifth nuisance—the man hard of hearing! He leans forward with both hands at his ears, and seems to be growing into the very stage itself. Yet for all he never fails to miss the points. He perceives the audience roaring suddenly, and in dreadful agitation he turns to you, when you are wrapt in the following speech, and asks:—"What was that? what was that?" If you are not a madman by the end of the play, you must have settled with indeed.

Then there is the country family refreshing themselves with apples and peanuts every minute. They are disposed very near you, and when the paternal head goes out to renew stock, he knocks regularly every foot. He always feels it his duty to tread on your toes; and so they sit grinding and crunching, and talking, and smelling of stables, and stale cake and a damp umbrella, until your pleasure is nullified for that evening.

Next is that unpleasant impostor—the man who knows all the performers by their first names. Though, in reality, he has no more personal acquaintance with the parties known to spectators of so familiarly, than yourself, he persists in a nomenclature that would have you believe him their most intimate friend. He tells you what advice he gave "Johnny" Mortimer about his wig; how he instructed "Joe" Polk as to the business of a scene in "Captain" Absolute; he narrates the joke he played on "Ned" Booth; he has also a capital story to tell about himself and "Dan" Bartley, and he does not omit the account of his first meeting with "Jim" Wallack and "Lem" Shewell. These scamps are not always the perpetrators of harmless lies, as I know in my own experience with one. He told me, with the most amazing minuteness, on one occasion, of a great service he had once done for a very popular actress whose performance we were then witnessing. Now, it happened to be a particular acquaintance of the lady's, and was familiar with her affairs almost as her-self. The matter was one of much delicacy, and she was a woman whose timidity in dealing with the every day world was actually morbid. Consequently I was thoroughly satisfied that the assertion of my familiar friend was an atrocious falsehood; and I was just provoked enough to tax him with it. Seeing himself caught, he smiled a very child-like smile, and admitted that he had been drawing on his inventive powers—but only, he added, to furnish food for conversation.

But there are many nuisances in an audience besides these enumerated here. The tobacco man, who goes out to smoke between every act and floods the floor the remainder of the time in a mixture; the man with the bad cold, who barks by your ear every three seconds, in another; the stupid man, who can't make out what the performance is about in another; the man who is restless and yawns continually in still another; and, in brief, they are endless.

T. E. M.—Metropolitan Theatre, as it was popularly called, was erected on the site of Tripler Hall; was opened on Sept. 18th, 1854, under the management of Henry Willard and Harry Eytinge, and was called the New York Theatre and Metropolitan Opera House. Julia Dean was the star at the inauguration at the opening. The season was brief and unsuccessful, closing in June, 1855. In the following February Grisi and Mario gave a series of farewell operatic performances, closing in "Lucrezia Borgia," on the 26th. In May and June following Mr. Willard appeared in a round of his favorite characters. On May 7th J. S. Clarke made his first appearance, playing Diggory, in the "Spectre Bridegroom." These performances closed June 20th, 1855. Mlle Rachel and a French company then acted there, commencing Sept. 3d and closing Oct. 20th, 1855. At the close of the engagement the theatre passed into the hands of Miss Laura Keene, who christened it Laura Keene's Varieties, and it was opened Dec. 27th, with "Old Heads and Young Hearts," and a ballet diverting scene entitled the "Valley of Flowers." Her season closed June 21 d, 1856. It then passed into the hands of W. E. Burton, who opened it under the name of Burton's New Theatre, Sept. 8th, 1856, with the "Rivals." Mr. Burton's management ended Oct. 9th, 1858. On the 16th Maretzek opened it with an Italian operatic company. Nov. 27th R. Spalding, Wayne Sylvine, F. F. Conway and S. B. Chatfield became managers for brief periods of time, and the season closed July 14th, 1859. On Sept. 14th, 1859, it was opened under the management of William Stuart and Dion Boucicault, who called it the Winter Garden. The opening bill was "Dot" and the farce called "Bottsli and Wagtail." Mr. Boucicault withdrew from the management in Dec. 1859, and the theatre continued under the ostensible management of Mr. Stuart until March 23d, 1864, when it was destroyed by fire.

B. L. B., Camden.—He died in abject poverty, going without food for days, and when in the starving condition he was sent to the hospital, but it was too late to save his life, and he died within a very short time after his admission. He was buried at the expense of men here of the profession in Boston, Mass., and, we believe, at the Auburn Cemetery at Cambridge. He had been married, but had been divorced from his wife some years previous. He may be said to have followed the profession up to the time of his death, but was out of an engagement for some months past at that event. He is supposed not to have left much property, but not enough to make his situation known, for if he had, we believe, there were plenty of professional persons in Boston who would have aided him.

J. F. D., N. Y.—Closer examination of the authorities show that Aristotle maintained that the velocity of any falling body is in direct proportion to its weight, and that, if two bodies of unequal weight were to fall from any height at the same moment, the heavier body would reach the ground in a shorter time, in exact proportion as its weight exceeded that of the lighter one. This doctrine was believed in until Galileo disputed it, and proved by letting two balls, the one double the weight of the other, of like substance, fall from the top of the tower of Pisa, when both balls struck the ground at the same time.

G. W. F., Fulton, Ill.—Since we replied to you in our last issue we have succeeded in gaining more definite information relative to the dry goods houses you named, and the amount of business done by them, as follows:—H. B. Claflin & Co's. largest business for one year was when the sales amounted to $70,000,000; their sales for 1870 figured up $42,000,000. The largest year's sales for A. T. Stewart & Co. were $65,000,000; their sales for 1870 we could not obtain. Largest year for Field, Leiter & Co., of Chicago, 1870, $13,500,000. Largest year for J. V. Farwell & Co., Chicago, 1870, $10,000,000.

C. Sanguinet, Rouse's Point, N. Y.—We accomplished the feat of turning a triple somersault at Batty's Circus Royal, London, Eng., 1843, on the benefit night of Barry, the clown. He met his death in the same year while with Batty's Circus at St. Hilliers, Isle of Jersey. In making the last somersault, instead of alighting on his feet he fell on his neck, and death was the immediate result. An English clown named James Wheel is said to be the only other person who has accomplished the feat. Several persons have been killed in attempting it.

W. H. W., Biddeford, Me.—You are right. The dealer having the lead, and only two points to go, by leading the ace of hearts, and his opponent, having a trump and playing a diamond, said dealer wins, and is entitled to throw down his hands, as his ace, to all appearances, is high and low, and his opponent suffers, as he ought to, by his own misplay.

Figure 8 Gaff, Plainfield.—1. In case of a hit to the out-field over the heads of the out-fielders, by which the striker reached home base by an error of the catcher, the striker would earn three bases only. 2. No; that we know of. 3. In October, 1869, we think. 4. In June, 1869. 5. 6. Cannot say.

BRUNO, Hamilton.—1. We have no knowledge of Coal Oil Johnny ever appearing on the stage as a minstrel or an actor; he held some minor office—doorkeeper, we believe—with a minstrel company, after his riches had flown away. 2. We do not know what time was the match referred to played, if played at all?

C. H. C., Boston, Mass.—Tricks count before honors at whist, unless the party are at eight points, when, by having three honors between them, they can score two points and go out if called before a card is played; but a party standing at six could not call them; consequently, those who stood at eight, and making two tricks, went out before their opponents, who held four by honors.

GEO. H., Monument Square, Me.—We cannot undertake to furnish the information you desire. We have never published anything of the sort. 2. No record of time in a race, and if there was it would not amount to anything.

SYRACUSE, Cycle.—Nov. 9, 1869, he made the first mile in a dash of 2¼ miles in 1:40. As the watches were not stopped at the end of the mile, however, it does not go on record as the fastest time for that distance, ship is 1:42.

ROCHESTER, Baltimore.—The "fellers that did not win in their raffle for tickets" are entitled to their share of the money refunded to those who did win. The entire affair is a stand off, the same as though no such raffle had been announced.

J. F., Cincinnati.—1. Capt. Barclay, whose actual walking time for 100 miles is said to have been 17½ hours, he having rested 1½ hours. 2. We do not pay any attention to time reported to have been made by the party you mention, as it is not reliable.

TIMOTHY MCK., St. Louis.—The Queen's cup, now held by the New York Yacht Club, was won by the America in 1851. She had opposed to her all the fleetest vessels in the Royal Yacht Squadron of Great Britain.

J. Q. A. C., Jr., Cincinnati.—1. The five largest cities in the United States are:—New York, 942 292; Philadelphia, 647,022; Brooklyn, 396,099; St. Louis, 310,364; Chicago, 297,977. 2. There are seven cities larger than Cincinnati.

H. C., St. Louis.—In throwing high dice, the spots on the three dice are added together in the three successive throws, and the aggregate is the throw. When three trays are thrown, the count is three only.

E. E. K., Chicago, Ill.—1. The late Mr. Michael Phelan played John Secretler, in Detroit, Mich., for $5.00) a side, in 1859—not in 1856. If there never was any other contest at billiards for such an amount.

PEDALISTIC, Boston.—1. You can obtain it through Wilmer & Rogers, 47 Nassau street, this city. 2. The fastest walking time on record, 10 miles, is 1 hour 24 minutes and 51¾ seconds, by Howes, London, Eng., May 23d, 1870.

B. McP.—At cribbage, the cards being played as follows:—Queen, queen, 4, 3, 1, 2, 1, the player of the deuce is entitled to four points for a sequence, and the player of the last ace to two for thirty-one, and no more.

J. L. CAXTON, Washington.—The Mutuals won the first game by 9 to 8, the second by 15 to 11; the Boston won the third by 9 to 7, and the seventh by 15 to 10. The fifth and deciding game was won by the Boston by forfeit.

ADOLESCENCE, Vassar, Mich.—The last match between Searles and Way took place at Stuyvesant's, Pa., Sept. 28th. The umpire, umpired 13:1. Light Way was inebriated and cleared but 7 or 8 feet after repeated trials.

G. L. M., Newark, N. J.—The cards being played as follows at cribbage:—Knave, jack, trey and deuce, the player of the deuce is entitled to any sequence, as the intervening Jack between deuce and trey spoiled it.

ROB T. INSOM.—Barney Aaron never fought Mike McCool. 2. Yes; a variety performance, under the management of Mr. Stetson, was given at the Globe Theatre, this city, every evening the past week. 3. Yes.

E., Kee-Wa-Kee.—1. It is more than ten years since E. Eddy was convicted in this city of manslaughter. 2. Charles W. Sotheru played Armand Duval at Wallack's old theatre, at the corner of Broadway and Broome streets; Matilda Heron was the Camille.

H. M.—We do not think marionettes can be purchased in this city. It requires considerable skill to manipulate them, and great ventriloquial powers.

H. M., Troy, N. Y.—In the election in this state in 1868 Gov. Sey mour had a majority of just 10,000 over General Grant, thus giving Seymour the state's electoral vote.

A. H. S., Lancaster.—We do not require one.

PEDLARCH, Baltimore, Md.—The traditional stage pronunciation is to call it spelled Jay keeves. Are you not in error about Mr. Wallack's pronunciation? Webster certainly says it spelled "Chat."

PEDALIST.—The walking match between Jas. Smith and Miles Kilbryde was won by the former, Kilbryde giving up at the end of the 13th mile, when Smith was a long way ahead.

PEDALISTRIANS.—Neither possess the necessary elements of a working nine in harmony. No. 1 has the best in-field, No. 2 the best out-field, and No. 2 the best pitcher and catcher.

L. J. BEAUCHAMP, Hamilton, O.—We do not intend to publish any more on that subject, and must therefore decline your latest contribution.

FRANK DOOLITTLE.—We have not heard from Conad or Crandell for some time. John Forbes, of Woodstock, Canada, can probably give you their address.

R. D. W., Birmingham.—Bogardus beat Paine in the championship pigeon match, shot at Chicago, July 29th; score, 91 to 89, out of 100.

CONSTANT READER, Philad'a.—A wins, if that was the price paid for them when a settlement was made. B's quibble is not allowable.

D. and S., Logansport.—As the answer to your questions would be of interest to our readers, you had better write to one of the dramatic agents who advertise in our columns.

J. X. L., Delhi, N. Y.—There is no fixed price for such articles; it depends on the popularity of the writer more, probably, than anything else.

WATERTOWN.—1. Jack Howard jumped 29 feet 7 inches, from a firm block of wood, two feet long, wedge-shaped, raised 4 inches in front. 2. We believe not.

ANGLICUS.—The yachts Dauntless and Livonia sailed against each other in a match for a 50 guinea cup on Oct. 24th, the former winning; consequently the man who bet upon the Dauntless wins.

BULL'S HEAD.—Your offer to row in the spring should be satisfactory, providing money is put up as a forfeit, to show that you mean it.

F. C. B., Manchester, N. H.—1. Yourself only, unless they see fit to extend the compliment. 2. Brief mention only. 3. Name new appearances and mention briefly the principal performers.

J. MORRIS, Galveston, Texas.—Your letters do not reach us in season for use. Mail them so that, at the very latest, they will reach us early on Monday morning.

GEYER, Columbus, Ind.—1. We have a correspondent there. 2. The CLIPPER will be sent you as per proposition. 3. We have a large supply on hand.

SPORTING SPIRIT, Windsor, Vt.—1. You may obtain them through several advertisers in the CLIPPER. 2. The CLIPPER is issued on Tuesday morning; you should get it earlier than Saturday.

T. F. H., Paris.—Your question, which appears to be one of simple arithmetic, is not stated clearly. You do not say whether it is per 100 ounces, per cwt., or per 100 lbs.

C. C. H., Cincinnati.—We are not sufficiently acquainted with the relative valuation of real estate in the cities named to offer an opinion.

BREAKBOAT, Memphis.—B. going out on A's deal, he, B, cannot remain in and deal for the next hand. A must deal again, so that B may not be deprived of his beg.

S. F. K., Wilkesbarre, Pa.—The fastest recorded time for 100 yards in this country is 9¾ seconds, by both E. D. Davis and W. H. Young.

W. V. K.—The yacht opposed to the Cambria in the Ocean race from Daunt's Rock, near Cork, Ireland, to Sandy Hook, last year, was the Dauntless, owned by Com. Bennett.

ADMIRER OF CLIPPER, Lynn, Mass.—1. It would be rude and show very bad taste not to walk in when requested. 2. It is proper to raise your hat.

INQUIRER, Orange.—It was not stated whether he walked on a plank or not, but we are inclined to think he did not. The distance named was not accomplished.

BANJO, Columbus, Ga.—Ther are both competent instructors; we cannot decide as to superiority.

SAGE SMOKER.—Thank you; but we have already published all we intend to offer on that subject.

A AND S., Montgomery, Ala.—The player who takes the responsibility of the trump can go alone, but the other cannot.

DAUNTLESS, Flora Temple's best time is 2:19¾, made at Kalamazoo, Mich. 2. Don't know.

J. H., Boston.—The bet should be drawn, as we learn that both times were given officially.

RIDER, Boston, Mass.—The only way to learn to be an equestrian is to apprentice yourself to a known rider.

S. O. B., Lancaster, Pa.—The work has been long since out of print.

ECCHO, Brooklyn.—The rule says that "no player has a right to see any trick but the last one turned."

LILY DEVONER, Boston, Mass.—We do not answer questions concerning the private affairs of professional persons.

G. C., Woodstock, Vt.—Send to E. Allison Brown's dramatic agency for a copy of his "Showman's Guide," price $2.

S. H. PIERSON, Newark, N. J.—Thank you. Should we have anything in that line, we will bear you in mind.

BEVERLY BOY.—The fastest one mile time on record by a running horse is 1:43, made by Dan Sutton and Forbidden.

A. B., Milford, Mass.—Edwin Booth was married to the lady professionally known as Miss Mary McVicker, June 7th, 1869.

H. F. K., Toledo.—You do not pay enough for so do.

OLD RY ADES, Frankfort, Ind.—They can only score two points for the ashore.

DOCTOR DURDOCK, H. C., Halifax, N. S.—The song is scarcely up to the mark for publication.

C. HOWARD, North Bridgewater.—You do not give the score, and therefore we cannot decide.

R. Pittsburgh.—According to the last census, Chicago had a population of 207,977, and St. Louis 310,364.

LOGAN AND ORRIN.—Tweezer ion chips is the world whose pop ulation are sometimes to be larger than New York.

L. C. H., Cincinnati.—We have no definite information on that subject.

FRANCISCO.—The municipal authorities constitute the corporation of the city.

OUR READERS, Chicago.—Pinkham's relief will be referred to in the appendix to the review of proprietaries.

TWENTY ONE, Pensacola.—The Brooklyn Stars. 2. Do not know. 3. Never heard that he did.

F. N. D., Boston.—After careful consideration of the subject, our opinion is that bets on a forfeited game should be drawn.

C. K. F., Boston, Mass.—Write to T. Allston Brown, at his dramatic agency, for his "Showman's Guide."

N. A. E., Buffalo, N. Y.—Put the matter in the hands of some lawyer at St. Catherines.

TYRO, Buffalo, N. Y.—When we are crowded for space we must cut down. Do not give the cast of old pieces.

S., Dayton, O.—An ordinary mooring suit is fashionable. It is optional about the vest and tie.

R. W., Chillicothe, O.—Goldsmith Maid's time, 2:17, is the best for one mile, trotting.

LENGTHY, East Saginaw.—Frank McIntyre was Coburn's trainer for his fight with Mace in Canada.

P. T., El Paso Co., Col.—The Alabama was sunk in neutral water, off Cherbourg harbor, France.

HAWKSHAW.—A is correct.—Frank Mordaunt played the part and not Frank Mayo.

J. W. R., Richmond, Ind.—We have all that we require at present, thank you.

ARNIE J., Steubenville.—Any music dealer will get them for you.

DR. PIERRE BLANC.—The longest accepted for early insertion.

Y. B. B.—The Red stockings did not lose a single game in 1869.

T. R., La Porte, Ind.—1. Rec. 2. Placing him in condition.

J. T. R.—A player "assisted" in euchre, cannot go it alone.

BASE BALL PROFESSIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP.

The Athletics, of Philadelphia, the Victors.

The long agony is over, and after a season of the most exciting professional games ever witnessed, the championship has been fairly won by the Athletics, of Philadelphia, who are entitled to the warmest commendations for their honorable, manly conduct throughout the season's play. The game of this day, Monday, in which the Athletics and Chicago clubs were the contestants, settled the vexed question, as will be seen by our report of the play in another column. The result cannot be altered by any action of the Championship Committee, so far as we can see. The gentlemen who control the Professional Association are too well known and too much respected in the fraternity to permit any illegal action to bias them in the award of the whip pennant to the rightful champions, the Athletics, of Philadelphia.

SIR JAMES ASHBURY, the ready reckoner and polite letter writer, is disgusted, and is about to send his yacht home. Sir James and the Livonia came over here to race for the Queen's cup, for which the gallant commodore is deserving of great praise, for nearly all of our international contests have to be decided on the other side, or no match; but our friends in Great Britain lost sight of the fact that we are a progressive people, and that since the triumph of the America in 1851, we have learned to build even speedier yachts than that vessel, in obedience to the demands of the times and the spirit of the age. The Livonia was built expressly to compete with our flyers for the cup, but the various contests she has been engaged in since her arrival in these waters must have convinced Sir James that we are still ahead in yacht building, if not in the construction of protests, which latter, the far-begrimed commodore will perhaps pardon us for remarking, are full of round, and so forth, signifying nothing. We thank the great Briton for coming over, for his presence has certainly served to create a more general interest in aquatic sports, and that is so much gained. Should Sir James at some future time make us another friendly visit, our yachtmen will no doubt be willing to let him have another shy for the Queen's Cup.

"THE DOOK," at this writing, Monday, Oct. 30th, is still enjoying "a life on the ocean wave," while we, who are in an agony of suspense at his non-arrival, are beginning to look out for some other great personage upon whom to wreak our vengeance. Our new suits of black store clothes are already commencing to look rusty; the toasts we had prepared to hurl at him are out of date, and the members of the hundred dollars committee are becoming demoralised. "The Dook" will have to hurry up his cakes, or his reception will prove to be a lamentable failure.

THE WEATHER was so rough during the latter part of the past week that some of our yachts kept close quarters. Captain Samuels, however, put on his Dreadnought, and said he would "go it alone" if no one else ventured. Then Commodore Bennett "took it up," while the Sappho "passed" at the same time, and, having no one to "assist him," Captain Samuels got euchred, and thus lost "two points."

WE ARE GIRDING ON OUR ARMOR for the fight. Our election comes off next Tuesday, November 7th. There are innumerable candidates in the field, of various denominations, and all expect to be elected. We cannot see how they all can get in, but the boys have performed miracles of wonder in previous contests, and if they are let alone there is no reason why they should not do equally well on next Tuesday.

LOTTA.—Among the latest inventions in women's gimcrackery is something which a Philadelphia dealer styles the "Lotta Bustles;" so called, probably, from the manner in which Lotta bustles about the stage during her performances.

GEORGE MOUNTJOY, imprisoned two years ago, in Philadelphia, for a violation of the Revenue Laws, was unconditionally pardoned by President Grant on Oct. 25th, the fine of three thousand dollars being remitted.

SINCE THE GREAT FIRE at Chicago the inhabitants of our cheap boarding houses have learned to "rise from their hashes" without grumbling.

A CARD.
CHICAGO, Friday, Oct. 27th, '71.
FRANK QUEEN, Esq.—DEAR SIR.—I notice a report from your regular correspondent on the 23rd inst. that, quoting his own words—"RELIEF IS COMING IN FROM ALL QUARTERS, FOR WHICH THE GENEROUS DONORS HAVE THE HEARTFELT THANKS OF THE ENTIRE CHICAGO PROFESSION." Allow me to state positively, in behalf of the professionals, minstrel and dramatic, now in Chicago, that we have up to the present date no knowledge of relief having been sent us, except in two instances, viz:—1st. On Sunday night, immediately succeeding that of the fire, Mr. Chas. Pope, of St. Louis, arrived in our city with $1,300, of which $1,000 was donated by the Mayor of St. Louis, from the general fund, and the remainder from professional and private gift. Mr. Pope placed the above sum in the hands of J. H. McVicker, Esq., and our respective managers, viz:—Messrs. McVicker, Langrishe, Aiken and Brandt, met by appointment, at the New Briggs House, to consult upon the manner of division of this sum. After some discussion the matter resulted in the division of $1,040 equally between the four managers, giving two hundred and fifty dollars to each, and leaving the balance in Mr. McVicker's hands. Messrs. Langrishe, Aiken and Brandt, immediately divided their shares in accordance with the wave of their companies, viz., equally, giving $8 per head to Aiken's, $10 per head to Langrishe's, and a somewhat larger sum, per head, to the minstrels, who, as a company, were less in number. I have no means of sealing, authoritatively, in regard to McVicker's individuals. 2d. Mr. F. E. Aiken received, last week, a letter of condolence from the members of the MOBILE THEATRE, enclosing the sum of $229 50, the result of a PRIVATE SUBSCRIPTION, NOT BENEFIT, for the relief of the professionals in this, to be distributed at his discretion. He immediately notified the members of the Globe company, and all others as far as possible, called a meeting at his house to inquire into deserving cases, as the sum was not large enough to divide equally, and so he endeavored to relieve the most necessitous. Three weeks have now elapsed since the calamity, and these are the ONLY SUMS of which ANY KNOWLEDGE has reached us except through newspaper reports, and it has been a source of much annoyance to the professionals here, many of whom were for two weeks entirely destitute, eating the bread of charity and wearing borrowed clothes, in newspaper reports of vast sums being sent to their relief, and yet not receiving the wherewithal to purchase a three cent stamp in order to inform their friends and relatives of their whereabouts. An announcement was made that free passes would be given to all who wished to leave the city, and many actors applied to the committee for tickets, and were informed that Gen. Sheridan had forbidden their issue, and that all unemployed, able bodied men were wanted for laborers in the city. I see by your paper that Miss Maggie Mitchell has sent us $300, and that a gentleman was sent from the Arch Street Theatre, Philadelphia, with $810.75 for the relief of the professionals only, in Chicago. We have received none of them. In our trouble we turn to you as being in a position best enabled to furnish us the information we require, and request you to make this known to those represented as having contributed to the relief fund, and ascertain for us where the money has gone. To those who turned over the receipts of their benefits to the general relief fund, I will state that requests for assistance for our profession that have been preferred to those in charge of said fund have not been complied with. Therefore we have relinquished all expectations from that quarter, although we cannot think that the original donors intended we should be debarred from receipt of any portion of their gifts. But there are many who gave benefits for the relief DIRECTLY of the MEMBERS OF THE PROFESSION, and therefore we issue this request, viz.:—That ALL who have sent any aid in money to Chicago, either individually or professionally, by benefits or by private subscription, either to the general suffering or to the profession alone, will AT ONCE please send a statement of the various amounts, date of sending, and where and to whose care it was sent, and we will publish a full list of such amounts, and also a statement of the disposal of the money. Also all sufferers who have left the city will please communicate their present addresses. Yours respectfully, T. CHAS. HOWARD,
For the Profession als of Chicago.

IMPORTANT PUBLIC NOTICE.
MR SAM HAGUE, PROPRIETOR of the ORIGINAL and only SLAVE TROUPE of GEORGIA MINSTRELS, now PERMANENTLY LOCATED at the ST. JAMES HALL, LIVERPOOL, ENGLAND, begs to CAUTION the American Public from being misled by the advertisements of a person calling himself CHAS. R. HICKS, who is at present running a party of negroes through the States, illegally assuming the TITLE of this company, and advertising them as THE COMPANY from ST. JAMES' HALL, LIVERPOOL, ENG. The man HICKS was packed up while in England by Mr. Hague, and his abilities tested in almost every role in the minstrel profession in all of which he proved a "failure." In consequence of which he was for some time used as a check taker. Having no further use for him in that capacity, a description was taken up among the members of the troupe (the proprietor, Mr. Hague, giving the lion's share) to send him to America, which was done some five months ago. Having managed (in what way is a mystery) after he arrived there, in organizing a party of negroes, he is now traveling through the States representing them as THE SLAVE TROUPE of GEORGIA MINSTRELS from the ST. JAMES' HALL, LIVERPOOL, ENGLAND, making use of newspaper criticisms and bills belonging to this troupe, in his endeavors to mislead the public.

ADAM FOREPAUGH'S
AGGREGATION
Is now laying its course for Philadelphia, where it will arrive about Nov. 7th, and go into winter quarters. We are informed that the season now closing has been the most successful one Mr. Forepaugh has ever made. His exhibition was at Harrisburg, May 4th, and will re-visit that city, on its way to Philadelphia, Thursday, Nov. 9th. The following invitation was addressed to Mr. Forepaugh on the 23d inst.:—The signers embrace the names of leading merchants, bankers, and the editors of the Harrisburg papers. Time was when the class of men whose names appear below would as soon have invited a band of savages to their community, as to have solicited a visit from a circus; but the "world moves," and the honorable character of men in this department of the show business, and the brains, capital and energy required to manage an exhibition such as Mr. Forepaugh's, are now appreciated by nearly the entire community. It is a cheering prospect, and the influence of this improved condition of the business can but stimulate every proprietor, performer, and all others connected, with the profession to higher and better efforts, in the way of furnishing to the public, meritorious, attractive and unobjectionable exhibitions. The subjoined correspondence is from the Harrisburg Daily Patriot of Oct. 26th:—

GOOD NEWS.

By the subjoined correspondence it will be seen that Forepaugh's attractive and unobjectionable zoological and equestrian exhibition is to visit Harrisburg on Thursday, November 2d. It is now returning to Philadelphia after one of the most successful campaigns through the west ever made by any similar exhibition. We are pleased to announce the fact that the exhibition is to visit our city again, and with pleasant weather bespeak for it a liberal patronage from our entire community.

HARRISBURG, Oct. 23d, 1871.
ADAM FOREPAUGH, PROPRIETOR FOREPAUGH'S AGGREGATION.—
DEAR SIR.—Learning that your Exhibition is now en route for Philadelphia, we, the undersigned, in behalf of many citizens respectfully request that if convenient you will re-visit Harrisburg, with your Exhibition. The pleasant weather that attended your former visit prevented many of our citizens and their families from attending it. We trust that our request will be granted.

and many other citizens of Harrisburg.

JOHNSTOWN, Oct. 24th, 1871.
GENTLEMEN.—I have just received your agreeable note of the 23d inst., inviting me to revisit Harrisburg with my Zoological and Equestrian Aggregation. I am now en route for the city of Philadelphia, and it was not my intention to exhibit at Harrisburg again this season, but remembering the liberal patronage my Exhibition has received from your citizens in times past, and highly appreciating the source from which the present cordial invitation emanates, I most cheerfully waive all pecuniary considerations, and in answer to your courteous invitation would state that on Thursday, Nov. 2d, my establishment will exhibit in your city, and on the Camp ground.
Very respectfully, ADAM FOREPAUGH.

A NEW SPECIALTY.
"THE DOUBLE TUMBLERONICON"
(OR MUSICAL GLASSES.)
Mr. Jas. C. Kenny and Miss Mary Kenny.
In this beautiful musical novelty, sixty glasses and one piano are used at the same time,

"WHERE SCALDINGS ARE NO MORE."

These queer verses were actually written by a bereaved father—says a writer in the October Galaxy—and published and paid for as an advertisement in a Baltimore paper, twenty-two years ago. For sorrow and unconscious absurdity they probably have no equal in literature:—

LINES ON THE DEATH OF A BURNT CHILD.

Come all my friends, both old and young!
Oh, hark, and you shall hear
How death did quickly snatch the child
The parents loved most dear.

The last and least of their little flock
Was caught by a stove by its little frock,
In failing o'er on Sabbath day
While the parents dear were not away.

And to see and hear, but not to save
Their little boy from an early grave,
Which puts them in mind of one of yore,
Who died by a scald while creeping on the floor.

Strange! They both were burned on a Sabbath day,
And put in the ground on Tuesday eve,
A family living in an adjoining room,
Hastened to the spot of grief and gloom.

Eighteen months Lucina spent with them,
And cheered them with his smile,
And soon they mourned in weeds of woe
For their dear scalded child.

But oh, what sorrows fill their hearts!
'Tis more than tongue can tell,
To think how soon the time did come
To take their last farewell.

And now the little boy has gone
To that bright world above,
The other four please step this way,
And sing Redeeming Love.

Then, Tompkins, now a warning take,
Prepare to meet your God,
That you may meet your happy flock
In yonder bless abode.

There you may meet around the throne,
Parents and children, on that shore
Where farewell tears are never shed,
And scaldings are no more.

THE BALLET GIRL,
FROM THREE POINTS OF VIEW.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

FROM A COULEUR DE ROSE VIEW.

She is the support of a widowed mother and seven little brothers and sisters; the incarnation of every virtue; an emblem of spotless womankind, who passes unscathed temptation and the ordeal of a public life; too timid to show the latent talent in her breast, her modesty shrinks from the ambition of others in her profession, and she walks on and off the stage in her humble capacity of ballet girl, respected by all as much as the brightest star of the dramatic profession.

Hard necessity, not choice, shows her to us clad in scant attire before the footlights, and her modest cheek blushes, and her gentle eyes fill with tears, at the thought that she is compelled to exhibit her form thus arrayed nightly to the rude public gaze. She is a bright example and model of purity and good behavior to all women in the theatrical profession. Her soul is poetical, and eagerly feeds on the words of Shakespeare uttered nightly in her hearing. She venerates genius, and stands upon the stage gazing transfixed upon the inspired artists of the dramatic profession. She is charitable in word and deed, and finds excuses for the shortcomings of her professional sisters; and when she dies she is long held in dear remembrance, and a simple inscription on her tombstone records the virtues and goodness of the humble ballet girl.

FROM A DARK POINT OF VIEW.

"She is the support of a widowed mother and seven little brothers and sisters!" What! on ten dollars a week? with tights and shoes and fairy clothes, and street clothes, and powder and paint to find? Bah; romance, my dear boy. If she pay her board when it's not paid for her by some cher ami, that's about all the support she renders those at home, and exigent enough for even that small sum. Her dinner must be kept hot for her when she comes home from a late rehearsal; her brothers are her lackeys, and her sisters her servants, and she orders round and crows over the whole family on the strength of her being in the profession.

"An emblem of spotless womankind!" Now, that's a delicate subject to touch upon, and I'll dismiss it with a request that you'll examine her countenance closely through your opera glasses the next time you visit the theatre, and if you are a disciple of Lavater, let me know what you read there; and if you are not let me tell you, as truly as you believe in the brand of Cain, believe likewise that unerring nature stamps the wanton's face, to thoughtful eyes, with an inevitable brand, that modern art, all potent in disguises, is here ever powerless to efface.

"And she passes unscathed through temptation!" Does she? Throw her boquets and diamond rings, and billets doux, and let me know what comes of it.

"Too timid to show the latent talent in her breast!" My dear boy, stop the first stage manager you meet and ask him who has killed the most scenes in his theatre, and I'd wager my head that he'll answer, stupid ballet girl, whom he has entrusted with lines.

"Her modesty shrinks from the ambition of others in her profession." Don't say her modesty, my friend; substitute her laziness and you hit the mark. In proof of which, step on to the stage during the rehearsal of a dancing ballet and take a peep at your ideal ballet girl. See, she has just finished, with twenty or thirty others, harassing the poor ballet master, for the present, in his almost vain efforts to teach her a simple step, and now she is lolling full length, after her exertions at the back of the stage on a roll of green baize, complacently watching the principal dancers going through their daily four hours' arduous gymnastic exercises. And why doesn't she practice? Heaven knows she needs practice woefully; and the principal dancer, then, has kindly offered her some instruction gratis; but your ballet girl is too intolerably lazy to accept the offer, and is well content to grub along, season after season, as a ballet girl.

"She walks on and off the stage, in her humble capacity, respected by all!" Well, I for one—but I'm prejudiced! Well, I confess I am, so we'll ask the leading lady of the theatre. She can't be prejudiced against an humble ballet girl, and must be well informed on the subject, too. Hark what she says! "Respect her? No, I do not respect, but I despise her, and will tell her upon me to my face, and ma'am me when my back is turned. Day and night she has idle time on her hands in the theatre, and Satan finds her work to do, for she is a tale bearer, and she is the eavesdropper lurking in the dark corners and shadows between the scenes; envious of talent she does not possess, envious of the dress she is too lazy to exert herself honestly to possess in like, she takes her petty vengeance in repeating many a distorted version of an innocent conversation she may overhear, and her malicious delight is to sow the seeds of discord between brother actors and sister artists. Respect her? How can I, when I know her as the parasite who returns generosity with ingratitude, and who I, in common with many experienced actresses, shake from my skirts as a reptile that will sting me!"

"Hard necessity, not choice, shows her to us clad in scant attire before the footlights?" But hard necessity does not compel her to don like costume at the masquerade ball, where we find her disporting herself gaily, devoid of "blushes and tears."

"She is an example for industry and good behavior to all the women in the theatrical profession?" What do you call industry? Poking over that dirty lot of crochet or embroidery, that re-appears daily and nightly in her hands in a green room, and has never seemed to advance any nearer completion to the end of the season. And what do you call good behavior? Ask the call boy how often in a day and night he shouts out, "Please, ladies, make less noise!" or perhaps you judge her behavior when she stands on the stage with her professional sisters, huddled together like sheep, and whom no persuasion nor request can induce to mingle, naturally, with the male peasantry "on the stage." But look at her off the stage and behind the scenes—there's no getting her then away from the male peasantry.

"Her soul is poetical and feeds eagerly on the words of Shakespeare?" The next time 'Macbeth" is played, go and take a look at your ballet girl; watch her in the banquet scene, and it she do not feed more greedily on any real edibles that grace the board than on the words of the divine William, she's not a genuine ballet girl.

"She venerates genius and stands transfixed upon the stage, gazing on the inspired artists?" Good gracious, why, if Sarah Siddons could come out of her grave and play Jane Shore the ballet girl would yawn, or wink to those in front, or wriggle with the true professional action during Jane Shore's scene with Alicia. "Reverence Genius?" I've seen her with Ristori, and Rachel, and Emma Waller and Charlotte Cushman, and never saw any of 'em affect her one jot.

"She is charitable in word and deed?" Walker!

"And when she dies she is long held in dear remembrance?" Romance, my boy; when dead, she is forgotten in a week's time, and her place at the theatre is quickly taken by some one who is as equally indolent and brazen as she.

FROM A REAL POINT OF VIEW.

The ballet girl has her faults, and her foibles, and her weak points, and good points, just like other women in the world; and who can blame her if she feel but little interest or consideration for the people above her in the profession, when so little real interest or consideration is extended to her? Indeed, she too often finds Jordan a pretty hard road to travel, with such slack accommodations and such a light purse for the journey; but under most circumstances the ballet girl is cheerful, undeniably so, and her laugh is often the merriest in the theatre, even when she has been kept standing round the wings at the first rehearsal of a new piece for two or three consecutive acts, and is left to find out for herself that she wasn't required in any of the scenes, and might have gone home long ago, if the manager had thought it worth his while to tell her so. Every ballet girl likes to get a part to play, whether she can act it or not; but she soon finds, to her discomfiture, that her crude efforts on the boards generally provoke a titter from behind the scenes, and she stands more in dread of the critics there than of those in front of the foot-lights. She is singularly exposed to temptation, more often than is generally supposed from the jeneusse dorve of her own profession than the jeneusse dorree of the stage; but for the actor who will hesitate to address an actress without some formality of introduction will gally tap the ballet girl's shoulder and introduce himself. If his attentions be obtrusive, he will laugh to scorn her dignity, and remind her that she is only a ballet girl. If his attentions are welcome—and she learns to love too well—who cares, for she is only a ballet girl. Let those women of the profession who look down on her so contemptuously ask themselves. Have we set her a better example? "Judge not that ye be not judged." The ballet girl's life at the best is hard, and thankless, and but illy repaid, and if we may not coin for her redundant qualities, let us at least give her credit for those she does possess.

BAMBINO.

NEW SPECIES OF SALAMANDER.—In a recent meeting of the French Academy M. Blanchard called attention to a new and gigantic species of salamander recently found in Western China. The Abbe David has brought to France a skin of the animal, and M. Blanchard states that it has been ascertained that the species is nearly allied to that of Japan, but distinguished from the latter by various characters. The gigantic animal inhabits the clear and limpid waters which descend from the Ku-Ku-Noor mountains and it attains a weight of from fifty to sixty pounds. It is of great value, as an article of food, to the inhabitants of the country.

PROFESSIONAL VIEW OF THINGS.—In 1853 there lived at Sydney, New South Wales, a gold broker named Knapp. When gold was discovered in that country he was a ticket-of-leave-man, and, like many others of his class had made a fortune by the discovery. His fortune was reckoned at £200,000. An American said to him one day:—"You ought to be eternally grateful to the British government for sending you here free, and putting you in the way of heaping up riches." "The British government," replied the ex-thief, "be blowed. In London, my business was breaking open jewellers' safes, and if the British government had not interfered with it, I should have been worth a million pounds to-day."

UNCLE SCHNEIDER'S INK SPLASHES.

[Extract from the Picturesque Tourist, published by J. Disturnell, in 1844.]

"Passenger Barges.—In 1826 the steamboat Commerce, Capt. George E. Seymour, towed the passenger barge Lady Clinton, and the steamboat Swiftsure, Capt. Cowden, towed the passenger barge Lady Van Rensselaer."

[Copy of an advertisement taken from the Albany Gazette dated September 18-71.]

"The North River Steamboat will leave Paulev's Hook Ferry (now Jersey City), on Friday, the 4th of September, at 9 in the morning, and arrive at Albany on Saturday, at 9 in the afternoon. Provisions, good berths and accommodations are provided.

"The charge to each passenger is as follows:—

To Newburg	dis. 3, time 14 hours.
To Poughkeepsie	4,	17
To Esopus	5,	20
To Hudson	5½,	30
To Albany	7,	36

"For places, apply to Wm. Vanderveort, No. 48 Courtlandt street, on the corner of Greenwich street.

"Sept. 2, 1807."

[Extract from the N. Y. Evening Post dated Oct. 2, 1807.]

"Mr. Fulton's new-invented Steamboat, which is fitted up in a neat style for passengers, and is intended to run from New York to Albany as a Packet, left here this morning, with 90 passengers, against a strong head wind. Notwithstanding which, it was judged she moved through the waters at the rate of six miles an hour."

[Extract from the Albany Gazette. Dated Oct. 5, 1807.]

"Friday Oct. 2, 1807, the steamboat (Clermont) left New York a 10 o'clock, A. M., against a stormy tide, very tough water, and a violent gale from the north. She made a headway beyond the most sanguine expectations, and will soon being cocked by the way.

"Arrived at Albany Oct. 4th, at 10 o'clock, P. M., being detained by being obliged to come to anchor, owing to a gale, and having one of her paddle wheels torn away by coming foul of a sloop."

Notice.—It is stated, on the authority of Capt. E. S. Bunker, that the Clermont, or experimental boat, as sometimes called, the first steamboat constructed under the direction and superintendence of Robert Fulton, in 1807, was 160 feet long, 12 feet wide, and 7 feet deep. In 1808 she was lengthened to 150 feet, widened to 18 feet, and had her name changed to North River. The engine was constructed in England, by Watt & Bolton, and brought to New York in Dec. 1806, by Mr. Fulton. The hull of the boat was constructed by Charles Brown, an eminent ship builder in New York. In August, 1837, the boat was propelled by steam from the East river to the Jersey shore, and on the 2d of October following she started on her first trip to Albany.

The above was taken from the scrap book of Mr. Alexander Matthews, No. 164 Greenwich street, corner of Cortlandt (directly opposite the site of the first established steamboat office), where the book containing this, together with many other interesting reminiscences, can be seen.

A FEMALE JAPANESE.—The personal appearance of a Japanese woman who recently landed in San Francisco is thus described:—"Her complexion is a lovely, transparent olive, her eyes dark and lambent, her features classical and aristocratic, her hair black, short and curly. Her dress is a compromise between that of a Japanese and that of an American belle. She wears no panier or crinoline, and the fine outline of her vigorous limbs is defined through the clinging and graceful draperies."

A SCIENTIFIC EXPERIMENT.—Young men who go to see girls have adopted a novel method of obtaining kisses. They assert, on the authority of scientific writers, that the concussion produced by a kiss will cause the flame of a gas jet to flicker, and easily induce the girl to experiment in the interest of science. The first kiss or two the parties watch the flame to see it flicker, but soon become so interested in the experiment as to let it flicker, if it wants to.

"Ah, Mr. Simpkins, we have not chairs enough for our company," said a gay wife to her frugal husband. "Plenty of chairs, my dear, but a little too much company," replied he.

THE MINSTRELS IN COUNCIL.

Interlocutor.—Sam, did you contribute to the Relief Fund?

Bones.—I guess I did, de boss took it out of my wages. I hope de sufferers got it, but de boss is shaky.

Int.—There've had some big benefits for Chicago, I hear.

Bones.—Big? Dat ain't de word—dey're scrushers. Talk bout de show people! De boys alwis rot dere pockit books in dar hands when dar's sufferin; dey gib de las haf a dollar away, de boys will. You see I know—I'm one ob 'em. I'm broke—straying gone to Chicago, and I ony wish I had more. Didn't de Elks' benefit come up smiling? What! Graaniasea, dem ere Elks is hipercoon, I bet yer.

Int.—Talking about benefits Sam, why is an actor who is up for a ben. like a politician seeking an interview with the President?

Bones.—Cos he does a good deal ob work for small rations, may be!

Tambo.—See here, now, boys; why is a nigger minstrel like a man what stuffs de jints ob a leaky ship?

Bones.—Cos he does a good deal ob work for small rations, may be!

Tambo.—But dat isn't de kreci 'dition on de problem. I'll 'form you ob de 'roof—its because he corks for a libbin.

Int.—Ah! here's a sweetner for you. Why is the capital of a pillar like the editorial head of a newspaper?

Bones.—Cos dere bofe sot!? Does yer mean a bed pillar?

Tambo.—Did you say like a editor's head?

Int.—No, no; I say why is the capital of a pillar, in architecture, like the editorial head of a newspaper?

Bones.—Oh-o-oh! You mean like dem tings de'yre puttin' on de new court house?

Int.—That's it, now you understand.

Tambo.—'m 'fraid dat's goin' too deep, Boneey. What you say?

Bones.—Bossy, you is too much for us dat time. We gib it up; hey, G-orge?

Tambo.—Ebbery time.

Int.—I'll relieve you. Its because it is placed at the top of the column. And now let our black Wachiell b- heard.

HOME BY THE RIVERSIDE.

BY ARTHUR W. FRENCH.

Home by the riverside, youth's happy home,
Far from thy humble roof tho' I now roam,
Yet in my memory sweet thoughts I keep.
Of all the loving forms 'neath thee asleep.
Chorus.—Home by the riverside,
Old sunny home.
You are my dearest pride,
Where'er I roam.

Sweet as a faded dream over my heart,
Come the bright memories ne'er to depart,
Joys of my childhood's days live in my heart,
'Round me far distant home over the main.
Chorus.—Home by the riverside, etc.

Home by the riverside, when shall my feet
Cross over your threshold wide into rest sweet?
Never to wander more—never to part—
From all the darling ones clasped to my heart.
Chorus.—Home by the riverside, etc.

THE LOCOMOTIVE DARK.

TO DAN BRYANT.

I've just come down to-day to town,
To see what I can do.
What's to be found, I'll find, I'm bound,
I think I know a few.
I dance about, I sing and shout,
I like a jolly lark.
In fact, you, see, they all call me
The Locomotive Dark!
Chorus.—Light the Express; That's me, I guess!
I'm as fast as any spark:
In fact, you see, they all call me
The Locomotive Dark.

I'm up to snuff, don't care a puff
For anything but fun;
I'm very glad I'm safe
I'm positive I've done.
My heart is free; I dance with glee,
Permit me to remark
That's what they call this darkey small.
The Locomotive Dark. JACK STRAW.

THE GIRL WITH THE SLENDER ANKLES.

END SONG.

O, girl wid de slender ankles,
O, girl wid de bobbikie waist,
In my bosom deep dhey are rankles
A barb by your own hand placed;
Gliding down de crowded pave,
Followed by your trembling slave,
Casting boldly far and wide
Scornful looks on either side.
Chorus.—What a pity, haughty fair,
Monarch's throne you could not share,
O, gal wid de slender ankles
And de high falutingair!

At de Central Park I met her,
And we sidled down de Mall,
And we took a seat togedder,
And I squized her, dat was all;
In reply she gave a wink,
When I thought that I should sink;
And my bosom rose and fell
With grateful throbs as well.
Chorus.—What a pity, etc.

To my feet a gauzy waif
Fluttered like a flake of down;
'Twas her kerchief, and I stooped
For to make de prize my own.
Then I took on me she bent,
Could it be that love was meant!
"Might I ask an arm to take
For a ride upon the lake?"
Chorus.—What a pity, etc.

Happy swans, serenely gliding
Our gay painted shallop by;
Not more happy in your pastime
Than my charmer was and I,
Till my love she gave a start,
"O, my wildly throbbing heart,
There's papa—what will he say
Should he chance to come this way!"
Chorus.—What a pity, etc.

Then to shore we quickly hurried,
To hear mamma she then took
Where to choice green seal and oysters
I felt happy treats to stand:
When the clock eleven struck,
Now we o'er such precious luck!
And my regal charmer said
"To a cab let me be led."
Chorus.—What a pity, etc.

Yet ere we had fairly parted,
In my hand a card she slipped—
I sought her at the number,
And was told that I'd been nipped,
For ere I went for bed,
I fell, and not a red
Could I find in fob or purse,
Bill for oysters to disburse.
Chorus.—What a pity, etc.

But time all wounds assuages,
And a week had scarcely flown,
When I, seated o'er my lager
And my choice cigar alone,
Heard a fairy step approach,
"Sir! I hope I don't encroach,
But, your orders." Let me fall,
'Twas the lady of the Mall!
Chorus.—What a pity, haughty fair,
Monarch's throne you could not share,
Oh gal wid de slender ankles
And de highfalutin air!

TRIALS OF A SHOW AGENT IN SLANG.

BY GATLING GUN.

'Twas a hot, Dusty day at a Quickly Packing Cab,
The Main Guy and I was corkered, for a friendly blab:
I was Running the Running Cove, when my partner gave me a nudge,
Saying "Ning to his Nibs, the Cully is on the Budge."
I had eighty-five to Pad, was doing my very best—
The old cove twigged the slang, saying "Oh! give us a rest."
The grub was very Queer, the Shaker douse would make you laugh,
And his Nibbs was bent upon getting a chuck and a half.
The Downs wore bronzed gaiters, and cut quite a dash,
While the main Guy's Mot, a Blonde, was terrible on the mash;
He squealed about the mob, who fakked an overcoat,
Whilst the last Cullies thurried with the harness of this bloat.
He tumbled to the boys; one had too much of lip,
And when we went to leave, for our bill he made us tip,
Saying: "Bloat, it is the best; I cannot see the check;
Always full of Jig Water, but count on me on deck."

CUPID'S FOIBLES, FOLLIES AND FANCIES.

WOMAN'S LOVE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

"For beauty still
Will shrink, as shrinks the ebbing breath;
And woman's tears produced at will,
Deceive in life, unman in death."—Byron.

The charge is false, believe it not,
Love fails not with the "ebbing breath;"
All climes, all ages, still must prove
That woman's love is strong in death.
When honor called her sons to arms,
Fond woman sought the battle-field,
And braved all dangers for his sake,
For death to woman's love must yield.

How often, when the conflict's o'er,
Has woman soothed the soul to rest;
And hearts that bled, before they'd yield,
Have sunk o'erpowered on woman's breast.
And when the hour of death is near,
The heart will then assert its power—
Her love will bless, her presence calm,
Her prayer will soothe that trying hour.

And oh! believe not woman's tears
Are false, and are "produced at will;"
A glist'ning tear in woman's eye
Shows that the heart has feeling still.
A woman's tear—'tis nature's voice—
'Tis often shed for others' grief;
'Tis the silent homage of the heart,
For tears will give the heart relief.

Believe not, then, the poet's charge—
That love will fall with "ebbing breath;"
No; woman's love will still remain
When he she loves is cold in death.
And woman's tear—it cannot be
"Produced at will," to act a part;
Faithful through life—sincere in death,
Tears spring from woman's trusting heart.

'Tout on rein." M. C. BEAUVILLIER.

OUTRAGE AND MURDER.

A REVOLTING DOUBLE CRIME.

Soon after daybreak this morning a Brookline milkman was driving along Western avenue near the Brookline boundary at the Highlands, when he discovered the body of a woman lying at the foot of a bank near the roadside. He immediately slighted and discovered that the woman was dead, her head being crushed in on one side while the bloody appearance of a heavy stone near by, with marks of a struggle and spots of blood upon the road, indicated that she had been foully murdered. He instituted a search for a police officer and soon found patrolman Reynolds of the 10th station, to whom he imparted the facts as far as his information went. The news spread rapidly and a crowd collected in a very short time. Officer Reynolds took charge of the body, which was covered up till a vehicle could be procured to remove it to the police station. While it lay at the foot of the bank some of the people residing in the neighborhood recognized the body as that of Katie Leehan, who was employed as a domestic in the family of Mr. H. M. Brown, resiciug on Western avenue, near Francis street. The body was removed to the 10th station, and thence to Coroner Allen's office on Tremont street. Drs. Edson, Arnold and Campbell were soon afterwards summoned, and an autopsy of the body was made, when

BASE BALL.

THE PROFESSIONALS OF 1871.

In case we should happen inadvertantly to leave out the name of any player in our brief comments on the professionals of the season, those omitted will be referred to in an appendix. Last week the catchers were commented upon; the first base players are next in order, and, commencing with the A's, we find the name of Andrew Allison, of the Eckford Club, who merits special commendation for his fidelity to his club, he never having played in any other since he first joined the Eckford. Surrounded, as he has been this season, by an atmosphere of growling, the quiet, silent manner in which he has attended to his duties as first baseman deserves great praise. As an earnest worker, Andrew has no superior. He never shirks his duty, no matter how things are going on around him. His fielding, too, is well up to the highest mark, and, if we mistake not, his batting average of first base hits will place him close to the head of his class. A thoroughly square player, too, no man this season ranks higher as a worthy professional than Andrew.

Carleton, of the Cleveland nine, who for the past two years has most creditably filled the position of first base player for the Forest City nine, of Cleveland, comes next. He has a good reach for wildly thrown balls, is a pretty sure catch, and holds hotly thrown balls well. We have seen him make some splendid stops at short field, too. The Cleveland club have wisely re-engaged him for 1872.

In Fisler, the first baseman of the Athletics, the professionals have a player who, in every respect, reflects credit on their class. Like Allison, Fisler is noted for his quiet deportment. His strongest characteristic is his remarkable reticence and his unvarying imperturbability of temper. Nothing disturbs him; in fact, his great coolness, nerve and silent style of play have led to his being called the "icicle." He stands up to his work like an automaton, as far as his movements are concerned, but when necessary he displays an intelligent appreciation of the calls at points of the game he is engaged in, which gives him a degree of skill in playing the position that few equal and none surpass. The Athletics will probably retain him in their nine; they would be short-sighted to do otherwise, as he is not only a very strong first base player, but equal to general utility work when desired.

Flynn was the first baseman of the Haymaker nine during the greater portion of the season, and he has proved himself an effective player. We have not seen him often enough to comment as fully on his play as we desire, nor are we sufficiently acquainted with his personal characteristics to remark upon his merits. He is quite a favorite with his club, however, and a strong out-fielder, as well as first baseman.

Foran, a former Philadelphia player, occupied the position of first baseman of the noted Kekiongs nine, and for such a stout built heavy weight he evinced considerable activity. He is, however, another of those professionals with whose characteristics we are not sufficiently acquainted to refer to more particularly.

We now come to Gould, of the Boston club, who first became widely known as the first baseman of the historic Red Stocking nine, of Cincinnati, a nine that will live in the annals of the game as long as base ball continues to be a field sport. In the first place, Gould is a gentlemanly ball player. In all the games we have seen him engaged in we never heard him utter a profane word. In fact, under the most exciting circumstance of a close and important contest he never forgets himself, but fully sustains the reputation he so justly merits, of being one of the most gentlemanly members of the professional fraternity. Would that we could give one and all of those we have to comment upon the same meed of praise. No first baseman surpasses Gould in taking hot balls, and his general play is up to the highest mark, while he also excels at the bat.

Everet Mills, of the Olympic nine, of Washington, next claims our attention. He graduated from the old amateur Eurekas, of Newark, probably the finest fielding nine of their day; certainly they had no superiors in fielding when they were in active operation. Mills is the best natured first base player we know of; at least, he used to be; he is especially jolly under trying circumstances, a sort of ball playing Mark Tapley. His forte is a remarkable quickness of movement in putting a ball on a player, reminding us greatly of Pearsall, of the old Excelsior nine, the prince of first base players. Mills is an earnest worker in a nine, quite strong at the bat; also, very sure in catching high foul balls, one of the difficult tasks of a first base player's position. A reliable player, too, Mills would be an acquisition to any nine.

McAtee is of the old Haymaker school, a corps of ball tossers noted as sure catchers, hard workers, heavy hitters, and a tough lot to get rid of in a match even when their opponents are the strongest team of the day. McAtee's record this season has been marred by sickness, but when in good condition he allows but few errors to be charged to him, even when he has wild and swift throwing to deal with. The Haymakers could with no better than to get together as many of their old nine as they can to support the same effective pitching and catching they had this past season. The list would include McAtee, the brothers King, Craver, Flynn, &c. But we are off the track—first basemen are the only players we have to deal with in this article.

Mack, of the Rockford nine, is a strong player, and is said to have a very creditable record as a professional. We have not, however, seen enough of his play or of him personally to comment upon his merits in full. We learn that he has been engaged by the Athletics, who are wisely drawing back the home talent they have allowed to slip through their hands during past seasons.

Among those who partly occupied the position of first base this season, was Pike, of the Haymakers, and while there he showed that he knew how to play in first rate style. As a left handed player Pike is specially adapted for a first baseman. He is very strong, however, in the out field, and there is his natural position.

Last on the list comes Joe Start, better known as an Atlantic player than as a member of the Mutual nine. As a first baseman, Joe, probably, has no superior, though in his play this past season he has not always shown this to be a fact. The trouble was, however, that he was not "at home" in the Mutual nine. Like the others, he tried to do his best, no doubt, but it is not always that a ball-player can play well, no matter how he may strive to do so. Joe is reliable; he is also a splendid fielder, perfectly at home on the base, and can take any ball, no matter how swiftly thrown, that any other man can hold. Joe, too, is heavy at the bat, and quite a "runnist." In fact, Joseph is A No. 1 as a first baseman, and can command the highest rates in the professional market. Our next article will be on the second base players.

THE PROFESSIONALS IN COUNCIL.

On Friday, Nov. 3d, the special meeting of the National Association of Professional Base Ball Players takes place at the Girard House, Philadelphia, and from all accounts the assemblage is likely to be one as creditable to the professional fraternity as was the inaugural meeting of the association in March last. It is of the utmost importance to the professional class of ball players that every existing club of that class should be represented at this meeting, as business of vital interest to the welfare of the fraternity will be transacted, and the important question of the championship fully discussed and settled. It is to be hoped that the auspicious inauguration of the Professional Association last March will be followed up by as thoroughly harmonious and intelligent gathering as marked the first convention of Professional clubs. There are many things to be done preliminary to the next convention in March next, in Cleveland, and among the most important is the preparation of a written constitution for permanent adoption of the annual convention. The officers of the Professional Association are as follows:—President, Jas. N. Kerns; vice-president, J. S. Evans; secretary, N. E. Young; treasurer, J. W. Schofield; all of whom will be present on November 3d. The members of the several committees, who ought all to be present at this meeting, are as follows:—Judiciary—Messrs. Thatcher, Mason, Waldo, Ray, Davidson, Hall, Wright, Schofield, Young and Hough. The above are respectively representatives of the Chicago, Cleveland, Rockford, Eckford, Mutual, Boston, Haymakers, Olympic and National clubs. The committee on rules, whose duty it will be to revise the constitution, include Messrs. Evans, Ray, Thatcher, Waldo and Schofield. Each of these gentlemen would do well to take up the constitution of the old National Association of 1871, in such form as to make it applicable to the government of the professional clubs only, so as to be prepared to act promptly at the meeting. The Championship Committee includes Messrs. Harry Wright, Davidson and Young, who, no doubt, will be prepared to report. No changes which may have occurred in clubs will affect the status of the members of the above committees, they having been appointed to act until new men are elected in their places at the March convention. At the November convention the constitution of the National Association, as adopted at their convention of 1870, was adopted as that of the Professional Association, with the important proviso that it was to be adopted only "so far as it did not conflict with the interests of the Professional Association," thus leaving a large margin for amendments, which can be made at this special meeting, this very clause admitting of such changes. It would be well, too for the Committee of Rules to prepare some report presenting their suggestions in regard to what changes in the playing rules they deem advisable for the interests of the professional fraternity to be made, leaving to the March convention to adopt the new code in full. All clubs intending to become professional organizations in 1872 should send delegates to this meeting, for it is of the utmost importance that the National Professional Association should include every professional club in the country. Without such an association professional playing cannot exist. With it, this class of ball players will flourish, especially if they be controlled by an association composed of so intelligent and gentlemanly a corps of representatives as were gathered at the first professional convention,

MUTUAL vs. ATLANTIC.

The time was when we have seen 15,000 people pay their entrance fees on the Capitoline grounds to witness one of the annual contests between the above clubs, but on Oct. 24th the nines of the Mutual and Atlantic clubs of 1871 played their last game together on the Capitoline grounds. L. I., in the presence of about fifty persons, and at no time this season have three hundred been gathered to see them play. The game of Tuesday last was a right jolly affair, being played on both sides in the most good humored style imaginable. The contest was rendered one-sided from the start, the Atlantics fielding very loose in the first innings. Afterwards they improved in their play a little, the Mutuals not making any more runs in the six innings following the first than they did at the start, the Atlantics, in the interim, fully equaling their adversaries. The Mutuals did some fine fielding, four double plays, in which Pearce and Ferguson distinguished themselves, being noteworthy. The following score gives the particulars:—

A PROFESSIONAL CLUB IN CINCINNATI.—A correspondent, writing from Cincinnati, says, in regard to the favorable chances for a professional club there:—"Last year we had an Industrial Exposition. This year we had another; it lasted one month; the receipts were over $75,000, and there were fully 500,000 visitors, and of this number 325,000 must have been strangers. The Hotels and boarding houses were overflowing with people. Strangers had to pay two dollars for the privilege of sleeping on the floor; besides, there were many who walked the streets all night, being unable to find accomodations. Next year we will have an exposition twice as grand as this year's. We will also have two new hotels and ample provisions for strangers. Now if this city had a first class club here next season, they could, without the least doubt, clear $10,000 during the exposition, which is to last one month."

AQUATIC.

THE INTERNATIONAL YACHT RACES.

THE SECOND VICTORY OF THE SAPPHO.

THE LIVONIA BEATEN BY THE DAUNTLESS.

In last week's issue we gave the details, as far as possible, of the fifth contest for the America Cup, and the last of the series, in which the Sappho achieved another signal victory over the Livonia, thus placing four races to the credit of the N. Y. Y. C., and rendering further competition unnecessary. Below we present the official time table:—

START—11.21.

Yacht.	S. W. Spit.	Lightship.	S. W. Spit.	Return.
Sappho	12.15:12	1.32:38	3.12:04	3.59:05
Livonia	12.16:58	1.45 22	3.34:30	4.29:41
		Actual time.		Corrected time.
Sappho		4.38:5		4.46:17
Livonia		5.04:41		5.04:41

That evening Commodore Ashbury addressed another letter to the sailing committee of the N. Y. Y. C., claiming a continuation of the series for the possibility of winning two more, he assuming that he is right as to the ultimate virtue of his protest as regards race No. 2, notwithstanding that said committee, who had the deciding of all disputed points, had previously notified him that they could not entertain such an absurd protest. He also stated that he should sail over the course alone on October 24th and 25th, if no yacht was sent to oppose him, and should claim the prize. Of course, the committee treated this effusion as it deserved—with silent contempt, declining to recede from a position, the correctness of which could not be doubted by any sane person. He persisted in his determination on the 24th, at the same time sailing a private match with the Dauntless over the ocean course, twenty miles to windward outside of Sandy Hook and return, for a fifty guinea cup. The Livonia got away at the signal, crossing the line over a minute ahead of the Dauntless. The wind was tolerably fresh in the early part of the contest, but scarcely got enough for racing purposes, save at intervals, yet the American closed upon and passed her opponent, whom she led over fifteen minutes at the turning stake-boat. Returning, the Livonia gained during the first hour, though the fog was so thick that her true position could not well be made out. Afterwards, however, the American crept away again and ultimately dashed across the imaginary line 11 min. and 3 sec. in advance. Below is the official announcement:—

Yachts.	Start.	Stake-boat.	Arrival
Dauntless	11h 50m. 27s.	3h. 21m. 30s.	5h. 18m. 30s.
Livonia	11 49 23	3 36 45	5 28 31
	Actual.	Corrected, 1871.	Corrected, 1870.
Dauntless	5 28 3	5 43 38	5 43 38
Livonia	5 39 6	5 46 41	5 44 26

The corrected time shows the Dauntless to have won by 6 minutes and 3 seconds, the race being sailed under the old time allowance rules, by which the Livonia received five minutes. Had it been sailed under the present rules of the club the Dauntless would win by 10 minutes and 31 seconds. They were to have sailed over the same course next day for a similar trophy, but while the yachts were on their way to the lightship, and some two miles in advance of the steamboat Virginia Seymour, which was to give the starting signal, the sea became so rough and the wind so high that the captain of the latter concluded it was dangerous to proceed further, and accordingly headed his boat for home. This necessitated the return of the yachts, to one of which, we are sorry to say, a melancholy accident happened. Two of the crew of the Dauntless were washed overboard—Lucas Murray and Gustave Lawsen—the former being drowned. The lost seaman belonged to the crew of the Columbia, being sent on board the Dauntless as an extra hand.

DAUNTLESS vs. DREADNAUGHT.

THE FORMER WINS.

A match for a cup valued at $250 was sailed by the above named yachts on Oct. 27th, over a course twenty miles out from Sandy Hook lightship and return. The day previous had originally been set down for the race, but unfavorable weather compelled a postponement, and it was feared this would be the case on Friday, also, rain and fog being the order of the day. It was determined, however, to proceed with it, the fog having lifted slightly, and at 8 o'clock the yachts left their anchorage off the club house at Staten Island and shaped their course for the point of starting. The steamer Leon having started to take up her position as an outside stake-boat, the signal was given to be off, and with a pretty good breeze, nearly dead aft, the racers started, the Dauntless passing the line at 12.52:50 and the Dreadnaught at 12.56:30. During the run down to the stake-boat the Dauntless gained upon her antagonist, the booming out of the latter's jib to windward not appearing to increase her speed materially. An hour or so after starting, the eye-bolt of the block of the Dauntless' main peak halyards was carried away, leaving the strain of the mainsail on the maintopsail sheet. Though the block was quickly made fast to the mast-head, the accident involved the loss of considerable time. She rounded the Leon at 2.48:59, followed by the Dreadnaught at 3.07:10. The remainder of the race does not require a detailed description, as the Dauntless maintained and increased her lead, finally passing the lightship about fifty yards to windward 22 minutes and 10 seconds in advance. The official time is as follows:—

	Arrival.	Actual Time.
Dauntless	5h. 7m. 1 s.	4h. 14m. 20s
Dreadnaught	5 35 30	4 38 30

The Dreadnaught having received double the present allowance of time, or 1min. 43sec., the Dauntless won by 20 minutes and 30 seconds, corrected time.

A LILLIPUTIAN STEAM YACHT RUN BY ONE MAN.—A handsome little steam yacht of about ten tons burthen, named the Anemone, was recently purchased at Bristol, R. I., by Arthur Cheney, Esq., the popular proprietor of the Globe Theatre, and Capt. J. W. Pierce, an old salt of Boston, Mass., was commissioned to bring the tiny steamer round to that city. As captain, pilot, engineer, fireman, cook, and "all hands," the captain fired up and started from Bristol on October 30th, and reached Hyannis in 9¼ hours, a remarkably quick passage. Storms and heavy winds then set in, detaining the Anemone in port ten days, when Capt. Bibber, of the yacht Juniata, shipped as an assistant, and the bold mariners succeeded in doubling the Cape and safely anchored the little steamer in Barnstable harbor. Obtaining a fresh stock of supplies here, they again got up steam and headed for Boston, at which port they arrived very wet on Oct. 21st. The steamer seems only fourteen inches out of water, and has a flush deck, so that the waves wash over it unchecked, the same as on our monitor iron-clads, and keeps the crew in a very moist condition. Captain Pierce says the weather was rough throughout the voyage, but the Anemone behaved nobly, proving herself a safe, staunch and very fast boat.

HARVARD BOAT RACES.—The annual "scratch" boat races of the Harvard Scullists took place on the afternoon of Oct. 21st, on Charles river. In these races each crew is made up of men from the different classes, who are chosen by lot from those who wish to enter. The course was about a mile and a half long, and lay between the two bridges. There were offered as prizes a silver and a pewter cup in each race. The first race was between a double scull, pulled by Loring and Gould, and a pair oar, pulled by St. John and Edwards, and was won with ease by the double scull crew. The second race was for single sculls, and was won by a Mr. Dereus. Three boats were entered for the six-oared race, and were commanded respectively by Gray, Bayard and Derens. The race was quite even for a quarter of a mile until the oars of the two inside boats got interlocked, giving the outside boat a good lead and the victory. The prize was, however, awarded to the inside crew, owing to the foul, but the decision of the judge has been appealed from.

YOUNG MCCLELLAN VS. RABBIT.—The race between these two boats, which was to have taken place on the Mystic river on Oct 24th, because of the strong current, came off on the Chelsea, Mass., ferry course. The distance was two miles, from Battery wharf to Chelsea bridge and return. The Young McClellan was pulled by Thomas Hewitt and John Mahoney, and the Rabbitt by John Carney and P. Reynolds, for a purse of $100. The Young McClellan won in 14 minutes and 7 seconds, the Rabbit being 61 seconds behind. J. Galvin, A. Tooher, Thomas McLaoud and Daniel McLaughlin acted as judges, and P. C. Ryan as referee.

A DOUBLE SCULLL RACE took place at Bangor, Me., on Oct. 24th, between V. L. Leavy and W. Scott Nickerson, in paper shell, Bodge, and W. R. Pitman and D. M. Clark, in cedar shell, Halcyon, to decide the second prize rowed for in the city regatta on the 18th, the award having been reserved on account of an alleged foul, resulted in a victory for the Bodge. The distance was two miles. Time, 12 minutes 7 seconds, the Halcyon coming in 1 minute 15 seconds behind.

BOAT RACE AT WAKEFIELD, MASS.—Lake Quanapowitt, near Wakefield, was the scene of quite an interesting double scull race on the morning of Oct. 24th, between the Angel, pulled by E. M. Parker and Lewis W. Frank, and the Queen, pulled by W. H. Jeffiro and E. M. Augestus. The distance pulled was something short of two miles, and the race was won by the Angel by about half a boat's length. Time, Angel, 14 minutes 27 seconds; Queen, 14 minutes 28¼ seconds.

QUOIT MATCH.—On the 24th of October articles of agreement were signed by those well known Philadelphia disc casters, Geo. Gibson, of Kensington, and Geo. Drinkwater, of Frankford, whereby they agree to play a match at quoits, consisting of two games, for $100 a side, the first to take place on Nov. 6th, and the second on the 13th, at the house of Nelly Pearson, Kensington. A deposit of $25 a side was staked at the time in the hands of James Colbert, 228 Arch street, he being chosen final stakeholder, and the second of $75 a side has to be placed in his hands at the Woodbine, above number, on Nov. 6th, between the hours of eight and ten o'clock P. M. Much interest is manifested in the match, which, from the reputation of the contestants, promises to develop fine play and prove exciting in character.

THE TURF.

THE CESAREWITCH AND MIDDLE PARK PLATE RACES.

Below we give details of the running for the above principal events of the Newmarket (Eng.) Second October Meeting, decided on October 10th and 11th, respectively:—

THE CESAREWITCH STAKES, a Free Handicap of 25 sovs. each, 15 ft. with 200 added, for three-year olds and upwards; winners extra; the second received 50 sovs. out of the stakes; Cesarewitch Course (Im. 7f. 132yds; 66 subs.

Baron Rothschild entered br c Labarnum, by King Tom—Blossom Heather, 3st 6lb ..... Maidment 2

Mr. F. Gretton entered br c Nuneham, by Oxford—Aurienda, 3st 9lb ..... T. Chaloner 3

There were twenty-four other starters. Betting—5 to 2 agst Helmet, 11 to 2 agst Nuncham, 6 to 1 agst Aimoner, 100 to 15 agst Laburnum, 11 to 1 agst Prince Charlie, 10t to 8 each agst Highland Fling and Vanderdecken, 20 to 1 agst Selina fily, 25 to 1 each agst Alava and Landmark, and 1,000 to 15 agst Dominante. After a couple of breaks-away, an excellent start was effected, Playfair, quickest on his legs, gaining a momentary advantage, but Prince Charlie, in the centre of the course, soon took the lead of his field, of which Vanderdecken, Helmet, Laburnum, Nuneham and Alava were prominent on the left, with Highland Fling, Dominante and Landmark in the centre, with Prince Charlie, Mineral colt and Playfair on the far side. Helmet was in trouble at the Bushes, and coming down the hill, Vanderdecken, Alava and Aimoner were beaten, Prince Charlie coming on with a clear lead, followed by Laburnum and Nuneham, making up across the dip, Laburnum rapidly closed with Prince Charlie, and headed him half-way up the hill; but the latter, coming again when Hunt called upon him, won, after a close and exciting race, by a head; three lengths separated second and third. Aimoner, close up, was fourth. Helmet fifth, Vanderdecken sixth, Highland Fling seventh, Mineral colt eighth, Selina fily, Border Chief and Dominante being the last three. After the race Ad and 10 to 1 was taken in large sums about Le burnum, Derby, and then bookmakers contracted their offers, and 8 to 1 became the favorite. Time, as taken by Benson's chronograph, 4 min. 23⅘ sec.

THE BALTIMORE FALL RACE MEETING.

FIRST, DAY, TUESDAY, OCT. 24TH.

VESUVIUS WINS THE HURDLE RACE; GREY PLANET THE ANNIESWOOD STAKES; MADAME DUDLEY THE COMPENSATION PURSE; HARRY BASSETT WALKS OVER FOR THE REUNION STAKES, AND PREAKNESS FOR THE PIMLICO STAKES.

The fall meeting of the Maryland Jockey Club commenced on Tuesday, Oct. 24th, at the Pimlico Course, Baltimore. The attendance on the first day was large and fashionable. The morning was bright and promising, but just about the time the racing was announced to commence, dark clouds gathered rapidly overhead, and a smart shower fell while the hurdle race was being run. Fortunately, it was of brief continuance, and the remainder of the day's sport was enjoyed without alloy.

THE HURDLE RACE

for all ages, two miles, over eight hurdles, welter weights, had four runners, the winner taking $5 0, and the second horse, $200. The entries were R. Shea's b c Astronomer, 3 yrs, 123lbs.; Gaffney and Tully's ch h Vesuvius, 4 yrs, 136lbs.; A. Taylor's ch h Dick Jackson, 6 yrs, 146lbs., and D. McDaniels ch g by Blackbird, dam by Planet, 3 yrs, 120lbs. The betting was $100 to $50 on Vesuvius against the field; Hugh Gaffney piloting him. Dick Jackson led the favorite over the first hurdle but the latter was alongside him over the second, which both jumped together, Astronomer ahead of Vesuvius, who had the Blackbird colt at his quarters. At the third hurdle, Vesuvius led Dick Jackson one length; the latter six lengths ahead of Astronomer. The fourth hurdle was taken in the same order, Astronomer closing up to the gap considerably. Passing the stand, Vesuvius was a length in front, Dick Jackson second, and Blackbird colt last. The latter balked at the fifth hurdle and jumped the rails into the enclosure, which at once extinguished his chance of winning. The favorite held a length's advantage over the next two hurdles, and as they came to the last one, midway up the stretch, he was two clear lengths in front of Dick Jackson. Both horses leaped the barrier beautifully, and then commenced a splendid struggle for victory. Dick Jackson gained on Vesuvius at every stride, and Gaffney had to rouse his horse with the whip. The gallant animal nobly responded, and after a brilliant and most exciting finish, won the race by a short half length, Astronomer being ten lengths behind Dick Jackson. Time, 3:58½.

THE RE UNION STAKES,

for three year olds, two miles, $500 entrance, $100 forfeit, with $1,000 added by the club, had 47 entries, but not one of them cared to encounter Col. McDaniels' colt, Harry Bassett, who, consequently, had only to gallop around the course twice to secure the rich stake, worth $6,100, for his fortunate owner.

THE ANNIESWOOD STAKES,

for two year olds, three-quarters of a mile, $200 subscription, half forfeit, with $1,000 added, for Mr. John Hunter, of New York, had 18 entries, of which five started. These were D. J. Crouse's g c Grey Planet, R. W. Cameron's br f Inverary, F. C. Bacon's ch c by Jack Malone, dam Sea Breeze, D. R. Harness' ch c Meteor, and Springfield and Lilde's br c Master John. In pools, Grey Planet sold for $360; Meteor, $70; Inverary, $65; Bacon's colt, $35, and Master John, $30. After considerable delay, owing to the fractiousness of Meteor, who refused to set face his opponents, the flag fell, Master jumping round at the same moment, and getting off last. Bacon's colt first showed in advance, with the favorite close at his heels, and Inverary third, but before they had gone a quar er mile Grey Planet deprived Bacon of the lead, was never headed, and won cleverly by two lengths; Bacon's colt being second, three lengths before Inverary, and Master John last. The time, 1:17½, was very fast, for the track was slow.

THE PIMLICO STAKES,

for four year olds, two-mile heats, $100 entrance, half forfeit, with $1,0 0 added, was a walk over for Mr. Sanford's Preakness, none of the eleven entered venturing to oppose him. Value of stake, $1,650.

THE COMPENSATION PURSE

of $6 0, two miles for all ages, had seven entries—Madame Dudley, Nellie Ransom, Catina, Quinnard, Sister to Kingfisher; Finesse and Airoy. They sold as follows:—Airoy, $310; Nellie Ransom, $158; Finesse, $165; Catina and Quinnard, $160; Sister to Kingfisher, $15, and Madame Dudley, $65. Quintard made the running for a mile, when Madame Dudley took it up, and after a fine struggle with Airoy, who was badly ridden, she won by two lengths. Time 3:38.

THE HURDLE RACE

Introductory Overture.

MONDAY, Oct. 30th, 1871.

The ides of November are upon us, and although we are immersed in politics up to our eyebrows, yet we cannot see that the campaign has, so far, had a very depressing effect on business interests. To be sure we hear a great deal about political robbery and devastating corruption in the body politic, but these charges always form a portion of the ammunition of rival factions. In the midst of all this fuss and fury, in the face of mass meetings and torchlight processions, it may seem a little extraordinary that our places of amusement are not more seriously affected than they are, for despite the many attractions offered for our consideration, notwithstanding the presence and performances of operatic and dramatic stars of heavy calibre, it is pleasing to note that no place of music is seriously suffering, and nearly all are doing remarkably well. The Nilsson opera, while not creating the furore that was anticipated for it, is attracting large if not enthusiastic audiences, and although one of the daily papers has come out strong for "full dress" audiences, yet our democratic-republican simplicity is such that, with very few exceptions, the patrons of opera prefer to appear in decent attire, and husbands have no idea of stripping their wives and daughters, and making model artists of them. The opera singers might even rebel against such a procedure, for the bare arms, and shoulders, and busts of the ladies in the auditorium would draw attention from the stage exhibitions unless the ladies of the opera corps saw fit to go a little farther in the matter of undressing, and thus put the patrons of the Academy in the shade. In behalf of all that is decent, let this "full dress," as it is called, but which, properly, should be called "undress," remain as it has been. If opera-goers are desirous of exhibiting their charms, and appearing in public in a nude condition, let them so exhibit independent of the opera; in drawing large assemblages of interested spectators, semi-naked women and nude ballets—the like of which the unities in nudities would fill the house from cellar to garret. Carl Wachtel, the German tenor, continues to do well at the miserable Stadt Theatre, in the Bowery; his audiences are large, although not so unwieldy as in his earlier appearances. They do say that this Wachtel was once a carriage driver, or postilion and that is why he is enabled to crack his whip so dexterously in the opera of "The Postilion of Lonjumeau." ..... Chanfrau during the month is doing well at Wallack's; he has probably run his course in this country as an attraction.....Charlotte Cushman is drawing crowds to Booth's Theatre, and though Charlotte has lost some of the fire of her youthful days, yet she is still a great artist..... The Union Square Theatre, the latest addition to our list of theatrical establishments, might do much better. The location is excellent, the building, attractive, and the prices are first class. To make this place what it should be, a constant succession of novelties of a high order of merit should be presented. The ballet is fine—the girls are handsome of face and luscious of form, but they should be backed up by performers and performances equally attractive in their specialties. A new theatre in itself will draw for a time; the Union has not proved an exception; but henceforward it must give its patrons better and fresher courses or they will sup elsewhere. Let the manager act on our suggestion and hereafter we may be able to say with truth that in "Union" there is strength..... The Florences, now at the Grand Opera House—the most beautiful theatre in the country—are making many dollars. For the first few weeks of "Eileen Oge," Wilkie and his consort became round shouldered by attempting to carry home the heavy load of filthy lucre showered upon them every night. The houses are now somewhat lighter—consequently Billy and his affianced are not so heavily indened on their return trip.....The Dolby concert party, a late importation, have not had to turn people away; au contraire, their expectations, probably, have been realized. They appear semi-occasionally, but the sovereign people of this city have not added greatly to the sovereigns of the singers in exchange for their notes..... "Humpty Dumpty," who lives and has his being at the Olympic, draws like a fly blister, and G. L. Fox and the manager are as happy as a goose going barefoot..... John Stetson's Globe, like the full moon last night, came up smiling during the past week. The Globe, and all that it is, came so near to an end some time ago, because it could no longer run smoothly upon its axis for want of grease. Under its present management it has been recreated. At first, though, it didn't look very cheerful inside, owing to the absence of those traditional parties whose business it is to crowd theatres from pit to dome; but last week, with a splendid company, and a most excellent entertainment, likewise a reduction of prices, the Globe became fully inhabited, and is now going round doing good..... Sothern, who has just arrived from an eastern clime, is avain climbing his way to popularity at Niblo's. His audiences have been very large during the six nights he has appeared before us. He performs "without any increase in price," the ads. have informed us. This was his saving clause; Mr. Sothern has not attained to such eminence as to warrant his exacting extra prices; he will do well in New York, but he must not look for great success outside of the metropolis. The St. James, under the direction of Messrs. McDonough & Earnshaw, has had a fair opening week. It is yet too early to make "probabilities" as to the future. We should like to see these gentlemen carry the campaign through successfully, so that at the close they may be enabled to "tell a hawk from a hernshaw." We meant to have this pun for a joke, but it's much like one of Mr. Rosenzweig's attempts—it's an abortion.....Daly's Fifth Avenue Theatre continues to do a most excellent "Divorce" business, and the hard working manager is made happy thereby. In fact we believe he can now "see his little clear" to mansions in the Fifth Avenue. We are glad of it, because in this way we keep him out of the newspaper business, which he was formerly in, leaving a wider field for others to operate in. This is selfish, we admit, but it is truth, nevertheless. If all men could find as much encouragement in "Divorce" as Mr. Daly's has afforded him, there would be precious few married people in existence. No one need want for the necessary evidence after what we have seen produced in the Rosenzweig trial; money will procure perjurers to any extent in this doubly refined, immaculate city..... The minstrel troupes, of which we have two—the San Francisco's and Dan Bryant's—are doing tolerably well; their houses are not full, but still they are making money, their prices being high and their expenses low..... Joshua Hart is running the Theatre Comique, but up to this writing Mr. Hart has not been enabled to buy any city sixes at 108½ from the proceeds; he may do better anon. This week he offers a very refreshing entertainment, and we shall be pleased to see a large attendance, so that the proprietor's Hart may be made glad. This is another weak effort at pun making; it isn't quite so bad as the other, but that is not saying much for it..... They are now trying a sort of opera bouffe on the half shell at what is called Lina Edwin's Theatre; they are doing as well as can be expected under the circumstances, but those who have enjoyed the bouffe opera at the Grand Opera House can have no difficulty in seeing how the old thing works" as Sister Edwin's.....At Wood's Museum the entertainments are neat but not gaudy, and, from Manager Wood's staying qualities, we should judge that he is making some money. He gives us some thing fresh every week or two, and the people look happy, if his curiosities do not. If we had to be a wax figure or a kangaroo we don't know any man that we would rather run us than Manager Wood.....Mr. Freligh, who directs affairs at the Old Bowery, means well, we know, but he has much to answer for in bringing into existence such remorseless, sanguinary, gore-curdling plays istence such remorseless, sanguinary, gore-curdling plays as we have witnessed at his theatre during the past year or two. But, says a friend of his, "he must please his patrons, and give them such sanguinary fare as they desire, yer know." That's truth, we admit; but that is not very favorable to the audiences." "I know all that; but if Freligh was to bring out 'The Prodigal Son,' without killing off that heifer then instead of the fatted calf, the boys would never, never come again." Our friend, doubtless, speaks sooth, and so we will let him have his way..... Our jolly, comfortable looking little friend, the Pastor, over in the Bowery, has a good divvy paid to his account every week when the distribution is made; he does not, to be sure, get a barrel full, but his business is such as to enable him to stake a friend, when necessary, or buy a "boss, cheap for cash," once in a while.....And now, having gone the grand rounds, and nothing extenuated, nor set down aught in malice, we shall offer a production from "Our Jim," whom we delegated, during the past week, to go over to Brooklyn and see how Lydia Thompson and her troupe were getting along at the Academy there. Here is the youth's curious report:—

LID TORSOH AND HER TROOP
IN BEARDED PAPYSEEKUN.

As Seen by our Artis on the Spot.

[OUR ARTIS OF THE SPOT—"OUR JIM."]

This is a wane world. It is no sense a site wiuch it is ony wonst in a man's life time yerren him to see. It wood hav kurdled Mister Becher's blud had he sene it, but as he was a standin on Phimmin's rock at the time, talkin to his Sez, he mist one of the britest free shows ever beheld by mortil iss. Lid Torsoh and her wyry yahoo troop was ter perform in "Lurleen" at the Akademmy of Music, in Brooklin, and I went to see it all; but wen I got to Montygu streie, wich runs onto wun side of the theatre, I sene sumt, as you shil here. The dressin rumsez is in the seckun story, with winders lookin rite on ter the streie. These winders hain't got a partykil of a shutter, but the liiss is made of ground glas—I perseom they call em ground glas to distingish them from glas made of mud, probly. Leastwize, yu won't see them as I tried by him in a ladder and climbin up, which was a futtle stemp. Rite opsit these winders, back agin the wall, is meany brite gas liiss, a burnin like the Sbecargo Fire. [Noterbeny.—By the latest sene I furn that Sbecargo is to rise from her ashes like a fenix. Wot is a fenix, and how cum he tu get inter the sants is wot not me.—OUR JIM.] Directly, shadders was seen on the winders. I tuck it ori in in a minit—tu hav a nerer vu I undan my oper glasez, boom I borrerd from the boxes yerin his nokin. And then a sight mister afore me wich wood "kure a ankerite." [Peauerip.—Wot is a ankerite, and wot ailed him?"—OUR JIM.] Guris and wimmin cum a bounsin into the rums, and ori there shadders was shoot onto the winder liiss, so that I cood see every moshin and all tha was a doin'. I held me breth, for fere lide mi sumthin'. The guris cliddent no the cood be seen, or thade fel putty cheps. I ave no dont; but me and 4 hundred other good men and tru, boom had got the wurd, watch the fre sho like it was a dimind mine in Afriker. And then the guris began to take orf thare things. Now, I shud hav son home, instead of takin so mene aswanting as to loor at these guris ondressin thereselves, but I was in the performins of a publick do ty, as a member of the pres, and I would scomer di than go back on me boss. so I stuk fast. I cood se the guris fust take orf this thing and then that, until I co'fritund, and lened agin a lampost for sucker; wen tha had taken orf ori tha cood, leave tha wood, like mi misses in the out of the bath tub, or like tha gresbin slave, boom had nuthin in ware. Sum was helthy lookin' and sum wooden! have dun to sit afore Mister Dowers as a model for his wevis meditusses. [Another Snip.—Who is Master Powers, and haseent he nuthin better in du than look at ravid guris? He orter be a shamed of hisself, the durty blagg'rd.—OUR JIM.] Sum was a littel tu obeseness and shodie a most tu much en bowpoint. [If anybody understands this he will please keep it to himself.—ORA JIM.] Ther was sum skelletins. It was a pleasint site as thare bustiful forms stood out in bold relief agin the winders. I hav never, until this nite, wisht I was enny other pursen than meself, but then I did crave to be Mister Arys boom la se in tu hav a hundred bodi-cod-ent he had a bully time? Wh-ii! Then the guris begun to put on thare tites, wich isscent sich a say jon jugin by the wa tha toppid over and bounsed about; but wot semed cureus to me was that guris hoos figure was thin and lithy with nuthin on 'em, and sune as tha got thare tites on, them same legs looked nice and round, and as bustiful as a skulptors moddil. And wen tha put thare waists on, and uther parts of thare harnis, I nevver sene such simmulitt forms in or mes hoon site. Just as we was a joyin ourselfs quietly, for sich a sho issint orin sene, sum dam boys sot up a giglin, and a hollerin tu the guris, and that gir 'em the ku, and the skattered like fri end sheps—the liiss was turned down, and wen that was lited again, there was at the winders and the sho was out. If ever I felt like chokin ennybodie it was them boys; everything was goin' on so luvly, and we wos ori enjoyin' ourselfs so much, and there wusent know whot else thare with sene, when them boys had to go and spile it unset things. Boys is wuss than a copperdemick, and I wish there never hadsent been enny. As tu as it went I never sene enny sho tu ekwil this. Instead of goin' inter the theater to se the pla, I spent the mumsey in oyster cellers, so that the audiyent cood spile the ilushin of the sho outside. This hotel stemich wood be much longer and moor interestiner if them durty little devvils haddent bursted out so. Yu kin make yuse of this if yu chuse. I rride to sel it to the Times, thinkin tha wood like a live pubblisserin of this uther xposher, but tha sed tha diddent dele in nude figgers, but in silverin figures. Then I rride the Trybune, but Horry said me wot I nu about farmin; he di dent seme to understand me. Then I saut to bind the iss of the Sun round it's head, but I cood not. I shud like this tu ori the papers at wonst by sayin' no uther paper had the nuse, wich is dun sumtimes. I shud hav dun wel. "OUR JIM."

City Summary.

MR. E. A. SOTHERN made his rentree upon the American stage, after an absence of nearly ten years, at Niblo's Garden, on Monday evening, Oct. 23d, before an audience that crowded the theatre in every part. The old familiar comedy, in three acts, entitled "Our American Cousin," was performed, with the following cast:—

Lord Dundreary	Harry Pearson
Asa Trenchard	Florence Trenchard
Sir Edward Trenchard
	Miss Nelbe Kemp
Lieut. Vernon, R. N.	Mary Meredith
	Mrs. Mountchessington
	Mrs. Ivan C. Michels
Capt. De Boots	Georgiana
Buddicombe	Miss Amy Roselle
Abel Murcott	Augusta
Richard Coyle	Sharp
	Skillet

Miss Beatie Sudlow
Miss Strickland
Miss Richards

It was mounted with freshly painted sceneries by George Heister, with elegant properties by Benedict and assistants, and machinery by Bensen Sherwood. Signor Operti had composed a new overture, to which he applied the title of the comedy, and also a waltz called "Dundreary," which was performed between the acts. The language of the comedy had been somewhat curtailed, and the closing portion of it considerably changed. Mr. Sothern, when he entered upon the scene, was received with a hearty outburst of applause, which must have assured him he had not been forgotten. His performance of Dundreary has been considerably modified, and we now see in it the fruits of long practice and study. Viewed in a strictly artistic light, it is a highly finished performance. His effects are produced in a quiet, natural manner, and more than once during the evening did he convulse the audience with laughter by a simple change of facial expression. His performance now partakes more of the nature of genteel comedy than of burlesque, which originally characterized it. Mr. Sothern created this character, and from a slight sketch it has grown by patient labor and toil into a type of a form unlike anything that is to be presented upon the stage. The costumes of the character have been changed; the long coat, which was one of his distinguishing features at first, now appears only in the last act. After the close of the comedy, Mr. Sothern was re-called and made a brief speech in which he stated that his success in England was due to the press and public of America, and that he had long had a desire to return to it, but to take a farewell of those friends whose fostering hands and kindly criticisms gave him courage to pursue the profession he had adopted. J. T. Raymond gave a very natural and effective impersonation of Asa Trenchard, the art by which he produced his effects being carefully concealed. He is a sterling comedian, and enhanced in a great degree the pleasure of the evening by his clever performance. As Sir Edward Trenchard was dignified and gentlemanly, which was all the character demanded. Mr. Teasdale as Lieut. Vernon acted judiciously and with care. E. K. Collier appeared to advantage in the brief character of Captain De Boots. P. Stoner's excellent elocutionary powers were displayed to advantage in Buddicombe, he reading the lines with distinctness and understanding. Abel Murcott was well acted by C. H. Morton, though the part has been considerably curtailed. Charles Hale made his re-appearance upon the metropolitan boards, after a lengthened absence, as Richard Coyle, which he acted effectively. Blaney was fairly performed by Harry Pearson. Those who recollect the late Charles Peters' excellent performance of this character would probably not enjoy the present performance. Miss Nellie Kemp, from the Haymarket Theatre, London, Eng., made her American debut in the character of Florence Trenchard, which was well performed, yet there was nothing in her representation that calls for especial notice. She has a good figure and voice, combined with a pleasing countenance. Miss Jennie Lee, a petite blonde, played Mary Meredith with an arch and ingenuous manner. She has a pretty face, a melodious voice, and may be considered decidedly the best of the imported performers. Mrs. Ivon C. Michels, who is perhaps better known professionally as Mrs. G. M. Tyrrell, likewise re-appeared after a long absence, and gave an effective impersonation of Mrs. Mountchessington. Miss Amy Roselle, from the Strand, London, Eng., made her American debut as Georgina. There was little scope for her to be afforded for, yet in what she had to do care and attention were apparent. She has a handsome countenance and a good stage presence. The minor characters of Augusta, Sharp and Skillet were acted by the Misses Sudlow, Strickland and Richardson. The attendance has been large during the week. We think that considerable interest will be evinced to see Mr. Sothern in "David Garrick," or as Augustus Thrillington in "Not If I Know It," and other characters in which he has won much reputation during his absence abroad.

THE ST. JAMES THEATRE, Twenty-eighth street and Broadway, was opened on Monday evening, Oct. 23d, under the management of Messrs. McDonough and Earnshaw, with a light entertainment of a pleasing nature, the performance commencing with Offenbach's operetta entitled a "Prima Donna of a Night," in which Miss Susan Galton, as Ernestine, acted and sang with much effect and created a very favorable impression. The other roles were effectively sustained by James Arnold, Al Reed Kelleher, O. P. Sweet, J. H Surridge, J. D. Thompson and Miss Clarice Vernon. After the operetta, Miss Kate Brevoort performed upon the Crystal Chimes—a number of glasses partially filled with water—with the right hand, accompanying herself upon the pianoforte with the left. Her performances were liberally applauded and she was thrice recalled. The closing feature of the programme proved its chief one, the ventriloquial performances of Mr. E. D. Davies, from London, Eng., who made his American debut upon the opening night. As a performer he excels any that have hitherto appeared here. Upon the stage, before he enters, we find a small trunk, one chair, a screen on the left, and two green curtains hung upon a stationary frame. Mr. Davies, entering upon the stage, takes from the trunk two automaton figures about as large as boys of five years of age, and seating himself upon each knee he holds an animated conversation, in which the two figures apparently take part, the voices assigned each being peculiarly marked and distinct from each other; a voice is then heard issuing from the trunk, and the lid being raised the voice, apparently of a little girl, is distinctly heard, and again a voice is heard seemingly upon the roof of the theatre, and the persons represented are finally increased to the number of six, and all distinct from each other. One party is represented behind the curtains, another behind the screen, the two boys now placed on the floor behind a chair, the little girl in the trunk, and a man on the roof. The one behind the curtain sings a song, and each of the others sing one line of the chorus, which requires upon the part of Mr. Davies a remarkable exertion to thus rapidly give the required changes of voice. Filled at logues contained many witty allusions to local topics, and were otherwise interesting. His performances are remarkable, and were received with much enthusiasm. Many improvements have been made in the auditorium, the floor of which has been covered with a rich carpet of a tasteful pattern; the front of the balcony has been re-decorated; a partition some five feet high has been erected at the back of the seats in the parquet circle, which prevents the draught of air from the entrance doors reaching the auditors; considerable new scenery has been added to the stage, and new carpets supplied, and taken altogether it is now one of the neatest and coolest places of amusement in the city. The attendance has been good, increasing nightly, and everything betokens a successful season.

IN THE LIST OF PERFORMERS now engaged at the Union Square Theatre, may be enumerated the Raynor Brothers, Payette Welsh, James F. Wambold, the Mathews family, M. W. Leffingwell, Belle Howitt, Lizzie Wilmore, Lizzie Kelsey and others, in addition to the beautiful ballet corps. Some new features are announced for the current week.

CHARLES STURGES was married in this city, Oct. 26th, to Miss Libbie Cunneen, by the Rev. Theodore A. Eaton, of St. Clement's church. They left the same afternoon for Boston, Mass., where Mr. Sturges and Rollin Howard commence an engagement at the St. James Theatre, Oct. 30th.

MISS JENNIE HUGHES, serio-comic vocalist; Miss Ada Wray, songs, with banjo accompaniment; Gen. Grant, Jr., song and dance; the St. Felix ballet troupe, four in number; and Mons. Carron and sons, acrobats, were the fresh appearances at the Theatre Comique during the past week. Miss Jennie Hughes, who has a beautiful face, a plump, well rounded form, and a voice of great purity and sweetness of tone, was enthusiastically received, being thrice recalled. Her songs were fresh, artistically rendered, and gave much satisfaction. She was elegantly and tastefully costumed and may be considered a pleasing and attractive vocalist. Miss Ada Wray's pretty face and graceful manners quickly won the sympathies of the audience, and her efforts were greeted with applause. General Grant, Jr., a little boy some three feet high, performed several familiar songs and dances creditably. The little girls comprising the St. Felix ballet troupe exhibited considerable proficiency in the saltatory art. One little Miss, apparently not more than six years of age, is deserving of especial commendation, her toe dancing, considering her tender years, being especially good. Mons. Carron and his three little sons performed a variety of acrobatic feats, of which, grace, skill and strength were the distinguishing features. Nearly all the old favorites have been retained, including Charley White, the veteran Ethiopian comedian, whose performances are always pleasing; Frank Dillon, comic; Connors and Bradley, song and dance; Miss Kitty O'Neil, jig dancer; Larry Tooley, Dutch comedian, and Herr Carle, with his daughters, the Misses Emma and Lillie, who, in conjunction with the corps de ballet, appeared in a divertissement entitled the "Brigands." On Thursday afternoon, Nov. 2d, an extra performance is announced, the proceeds of which are to be devoted to the Chicago sufferers.

DAN RICE and the Paris Pavilion Circus closed the season with the performances of Saturday evening, Oct. 28th.

LENT'S NEW YORK CIRCUS is announced to commence a regular season at the iron building, in Fourteenth street, this evening, Oct. 30th.

WELL MAY THE PEOPLE EXCLAIM, with Cardinal Richelieu, "Who shall proclaim divorce 'twixt thee and me?" if they expect to see the popular comedy entitled "Divorce," withdrawn from the boards of the Fifth Avenue Theatre as long as the attendance continues as large as it was during the past week, notwithstanding unpleasant weather and strong counter attractions.

"HUMPTY DUMPTY" seems in a fair way to enjoy as long a run as greeted it on its first production at the Olympic Theatre. The attendance continues large, and the performance apparently gives entire satisfaction, judging from the peals of laughter that nightly resound in the auditorium. The attractions presented are numerous, varied and excellent, there being much to please the eye and the ear, while the vagaries of G. L. Fox, as clown, assisted by his brother Charley, as pantaloon, create much mirth.

AT WOOD'S MUSEUM the "Octoroon" has continued the attraction at the evening performances and Saturday matinee. It has been supplemented with the drama entitled the "Gipsey Farmer." At the other matinee performances the "Gipsey Farmer" and a farce entitled "Long Brother John," in which the giant Major Lang and Col. Stocking, a dwarf, appeared, constituted the performances. This evening Master Percy Roselle, a boy actor, who is said to have won much reputation upon the Chicago stage, will make his metropolitan debut in a drama which has been written expressly for him entitled the "Boy Detective."

"EILEEN OGE," which has achieved a more genuine success than is usually attained by Irish dramas, has continued to attract good sized audiences at the Grand Opera House during the past week. It is not only beautifully mounted but well acted, and Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Florence, by their comicalities and natural acting, contributed, in a great degree, to its success. The attendance on Friday evening, the occasion of Mrs. Florence's benefit, was highly complimentary to that lady. On Sunday evening, Oct. 29th, the third instrumental and vocal concert by James Fisk, Jr.'s Ninth Regiment Band occurred, the solo talent being Miss Emma Howson and Signorina Farette, vocalists; Mlle Theresa Castellan, violinist; Mlle Eliza de Try, violoncellist, and J. Levy, cornet-a-piston. The concerts have become quite popular and attract a large attendance.

CHARLES FECHTER co-operates with Lester Wallack in giving a matinee ben efit for the Chicago sufferers at Wallack's, Nov. 1st, when the "Lady of Lyons" will be performed, Mr. Fechter acting Claude Melnotte, supported by the principal members of the stock company, together with Miss Lizzie Price and Mme. Ponisi, the latter two having volunteered their services.

JOSEPHINE KNIGHT has performances in Fred. G. Maeder's drama entitled "Help," at the Bowery Theatre, on the first four evenings of the past week. On Friday, for his benefit, a change was made in the programme, the following pieces being presented:—The "Robbers of the Heath," performed by the stock company, a comedy called "Larry Hooligan; or, The Blundering Irishman," in which Mr. Murphy acted the title role and sang several songs. This was followed by the concert scene from "Help," introducing Mr. Murphy in his sketches and songs; then followed a farce called "Joe; or, The Nigger Busy Body," in which Mr. Murphy acted Joe, a negro, and performed a bone solo, besides introducing a number of Ethiopian eccentricities, and the performances concluded with a drama entitled "Jaques Strop," which was acted by the stock company. On Saturday evening the same bill was repeated, and Mr. Murphy closed his engagement. For this evening, Oct. 30th, a new local, sensation drama by Stanley McKenna entitled "Crime; or, The Secrets of a City Life," is announced for production, in which Miss Charlotte Stanley will make her first appearance at that theatre.

A REDUCTION IN THE PRICES OF ADMISSION at the Globe Theatre, combined with one of the most attractive programmes that has been presented at any variety theatre in this city for a long time, served to attract a large attendance. Seventy-five cents is the highest price demanded for a seat—save in the private boxes—and the admission has been placed at fifty cents to the lower part of the auditorium, and twenty-five to the gallery. The new appearances were as follows:—James S. Mafft and W. H. Bartholomew, actors and pantomimists; Jacques Kruger, actor; Mlle. Leah, dancer; William Arlington, Ethiopian comedian; Miss Sallie Mason, serio-comic vocalist; J. H. Budworth, actor; the Freeman Sisters, character and male and female duettists, and Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Florence, in their celebrated Irish sketches. The performance commenced with the farce entitled the "Smiths and Browns," which was well acted because nearly every person in the cast had served some time upon the regular dramatic stage. Arlington then delivered a burlesque speech upon female suffrage; Harrington and Hart repeated their remarkably clever songs and dances. Two of the Wallda troupe of aerial gymnasts performed their acrobatic feat, combined with hat spinning; Johnson and Powers performed a double song and dance; J. H. Budworth, Miss Sallie Mason and Jacques Kruger then appeared in a farce entitled "The Victim," during the representation of which Mr. Budworth gave creditable imitations of Edwin Forrest, Barney Williams and other actors. The Freeman Sisters, attired in male and female costume, sang and danced in a pleasing manner, which elicited much applause. Miss Lizzie, evidently the elder, has an excellent voice, and no little dramatic talent; Mlle. Leah, who is an excellent dancer, performed a skipping rope dance, which was marked by grace, skill and difficult evolutions; Miss Sallie Mason, in her serio comic songs, won the favor of the audience; Mr. H. Lester performed as Sir Edward Trenchard with dignified and gentlemanly, which was all the character demanded. Mr. Teasdale as Lieut. Vernon acted judiciously and with care. E. K. Collier appeared to advantage in the brief character of Captain De Boots. P. Stoner's excellent elocutionary powers were displayed to advantage in Buddicombe, he reading the lines with distinctness and understanding. Abel Murcott was well acted by C. H. mass in his specialty of "Solon Shingle" and as Joshua Butterby in Tom Taylor's comedy of "Victims." At the matinee on the 29th the drama of "The Long Strike" was produced. During the second and last week of Mr. Owens' engagement he will appear in Boucicault's drama of "Dot" and his specialty of "A Live Indian." In addition to the "Pantomime of "Solon Shingle," Daly's comedy of "Divorce" will be produced Nov. 6th, the management having purchased the right to produce it in Philadelphia. Miss Lucille Western, Mr. E. A. Sothern and other stars will follow in rapid succession.

OUR SAN FRANCISCO AFFAIRS, our correspondent, under date of Oct. 21st, writes:—"Mr. Frank Chanfrau, on the 16th commenced a four weeks' engagement at the California theatre. A numerous audience, bright in aspect and cheerful in feeling, assembled to witness the production of the familiar 'Sam.' Everybody knows 'Sam' to be an extravagant, farcical comedy, and Mr. Chanfrau's portraiture of the title character to be a florid picture, gracefully outlined, permeated with a droll humor, but wanting something of the ripple of light and shade. To refer to either any further than to say both recurred once more in as bright and attractive colors as formerly, is not necessary now. The excellencies displayed by several actors of the support call for recognition. J. C. Williamson, as the phenomenon Dick Jenkinson, revealed a lightness of spirit and a merry dash, which sat upon him with agreeable grace and ease. Harry Edwards as Bill Crockett gave an admirable sketch of a self contented, unctuous tramp, and Leathey Arthur Shafton in dress and appearance was thoroughly English and in bright contrast with the careless, uncharacteristic make-ups of others, whose names might be mentioned. May Howard's Laura Rosylin was jolly and gushing, and Minnie Walton's Emily Cropley was as pretty and as well dressed a little body as ever wore dimity. 'Sam,' after being played to three fair houses, was withdrawn on the 19th in favor of 'The Ticket of Leave Man,' which, on the whole, was more than well acted. What most contributed to make this a well sustained performance were the rough nobility and honest manliness of Chanfrau's Bob Brierly, the imperturbability and acumen of McCullough's Hawkshaw, the life and humor of Minnie Walton's Sam Willoughby, the splendid impudence and burly strength of Mestayer's Jem Dalton, the fine Jewish physiognomy and accent of Williamson's Melter Moss, the quaint volubility of Mrs. Judah's Mrs. Willoughby, and the pathos of Mrs. Sophie Edwin's May Edwards. 'Kit; or, The Arkansas Traveler,' will be produced on the 23d, with Chanfrau, Edwards, Mestayer, Marlowe, Sedley Smith, May Howard and Minnie Walton in the cast..... A miscellaneous entertainment has been the attraction this week at the Metropolitan Theatre. The performance opened with the last act of 'Schneider,' introducing the 'Bouncing' scene and Johnny Allen's and Alice Harrison's songs and dances. The Lancashire Bell-ringers then appeared and made a genuine hit with their unique and pleasing music. Their troupe, which consists of six male performers and Mr. Holdsworth, a tenor singer of clever ability, is said to be the original one imported from England by Barnum, 1844. The performance concluded with a nondescript piece, written by Poole, for Johnny Allen, called 'Jed; or, Plantation Life.' The actors who were unfortunate enough to be cast in it had the sympathies of the audience. The production of 'Rip Van Winkle,' on the 23d, with Robert McWade as the somnolent Dutchman, will afford a grateful treat to many..... The week at the Alhambra this week was the benefit, on the 20th, to Charley Howard, the true exponent of the plantation darkey. Howard got a good house, as he deserved, for in him is recognized a professor who lends to minstrelsy all the dignity it will bear. At the conclusion of his engagement here he leaves for New York, under contract to play at the Globe."

LOTTA completed the third week of her engagement at the Arch Street Theatre, Philadelphia, on Oct. 28th, during which time she appeared in a new protean drama entitled "Rainbow," written expressly for her by Mr. Robert Rendell, of New York city. It is the work evidently of a gentleman quite new to dramatic authorship, and, as usual with pieces of this class, most of the characters are mere colorless sketches without much force or originality, and the dialogue is not sufficiently sparkling to render the rather involved plot sufficiently interesting. There are several good situations, however, but these suffer by the author's lack of dramatic experience in bringing about their development. Lotta appears in four characters admirably suited to her abilities, and as Rainbow Mons. Heller, Corduroy Bill and Persipis Bootsey Buff she found abundant opportunities for the display of her piquant and vivacious style of acting. As Mons. Heller she performs a couple of moderately difficult feats of sleight of hand, and in the other characters indulges in several songs, dances and the inevitable banjo solo. As usual, most of the other characters suffer; those supported by Mrs. T. A. Creese and Messrs. Barton Hill and S. Hemple are, however, all thoroughly well sustained and help to give roundness and completeness to an excellent cast. "Rainbow" is announced for repetition during the fourth and last week of Lotta's engagement, during which time the houses have been uniformly large. On Monday, November 6th, Mr. Charles Fechter will commence an engagement at this theatre, opening in "Hamlet."

FOX'S AMERICAN THEATRE, Philadelphia, continues to receive a large amount of patronage. The new faces here last week were: Miss Emma Gratian, who sang a number of serio-comic songs in capital style; Andy Hughes, who does a really excellent club-swinging act, and John T. Kelly in Irish character songs and dances. Mr. James S. Edwards, who closed a four weeks' engagement here on the 28th of Oct., displayed great versatility, and his character songs were deservedly much applauded. The grotesque evolutions of the Magiltons regularly arouse the audience to provoking much laughter and applause. Their act of "Les Trois Diables" loses its interest by its constant repetition, and we would advise them to procure a new act, and the ballet master at this establishment is abundantly qualified to produce for them a much better pantomime ballet. The amusing pantomime of "Nicodemus" nightly concluded the programme. The Magiltons will close at this establishment Nov. 12th. Ed. Banker closed here on Oct. 28th.

CINCINNATI THEATRICALS up to the 27th of October are given by our correspondent, as follows:—"Mark Smith's Comedy Company opened at Pike's Opera House on Monday last to an audience only fair in point of numbers, and have drawn rather light houses ever since. This is their third week, having opened in Syracuse, N. Y., and played last week in Columbus, O. There is a very good number of the troupe next to Mr. Smith are W. F. Burroughs and Miss Hannah E. Bailey, both members of Wood's Theatre last season. The troupe opens in Indianapo is Monday, 30th, where they remain a week, and then spend another week in Indiana previous to going to Louisville. Theodore Thomas' orchestra occupies Pike's next week, and on Monday, Nov. 6th, J. W. Wallace and Caroline Bernard commence a season..... At Wood's Theatre Abbott's Pantomime troupe have been giving the 'Three Hunchbacks' all the week to very fair houses. The cast embraces Charles Abbott, as the Clown; C. Chrisdle, as Pantaloon; C. W. Ravel, as Harlequin; J. C. Franklin, as Fop; Miss S. Duffield, as Columbine, and Miss Emile Herbert as the Fairy. The pantomime contains a number of fresh tricks, and apparently amused the lookers on mightily. The only introduced attractions were the Moe Brothers, who gave a capital exhibition of skatorial skill, and Jerry Cohen in his Irish specialties, which met with much favor. In the course of the piece Abbott gave a ladder dance, the dancing globe and a hat spinning exhibition. Harlequin, Columbine, the Fairy and Miss Sophie Ravel appeared in some fancy dances. A quite pretty transformation scene wound up the performance. On Monday next, 30th, the regular company returns to the theatre, in support of Edwin Forrest, who opens in 'King Lear.' Mr. Forrest's engagement is for two weeks. .....Satsuma's Royal Japanese nave been drawing fine houses at Mozart Hall this week."

AT THE NEW BOWERY, Philadelphia, Mr. Charles Foster's dramatization of the story entitled "Bertha, the Sewing Machine Girl," was enacted last week by a dramatic company under the management of Glassford and Meeker, with Mlle Marie Zoe as the leading attraction. Mlle. Zoe, in the delineation of the heroine of the drama, evinced considerable dramatic power, with much unconventionally expressed feeling. Little need be said of the rest of the cast, as it was fairly sustained. The piece attracted fair audiences, "Bertha, the Sewing Machine Girl," will be repeated until further notice.

AT SIMPSON'S MUSEUM, Philadelphia, G. Swaine Buckley commenced a one week's engagement on the 23d Oct., in his sensational play of "On the Track." In this protean drama, G. Swaine Buckley hits off his various characters with a humor—which is rarely lively—and ease of manner, while exerting himself to the most to secure the success of the piece, for upon him almost entirely depended any amusement that could be derived from it, and judging from the applause, we may fairly infer that his efforts met with the approbation of those present. Mr. Buckley also displayed much versatility as a musician, but did not attract large houses. Mr. L. W. Harris, who made his first appearance in Philadelphia in the character of Sampson Silnk, created quite a favorable impression. The collection of animals has been augmented by the arrival of those belonging to John O'Brien's Circus; and the Aztec children, the Bearded Lady, Master Bates, the Fat Boy, and Miss Belton, a dwarf, are now here. A new local play entitled "Who Killed Him?" will be produced Oct 30th.

"SARATOGA" was represented at the Chestnut Street beatre, Philadelphia, during the first three evenings of the week ending the 28th Oct., and the patronage not being what was expected from the success it met with last season, it was withdrawn and the balance of the week filled out with the comedies of "Money," "Road to Ruin," and the rather heavy tragedy entitled the "Castle Spectre," in which was produced for the first time at this theatre on the 28th. In the "Castle Spectre," Mr. Charles R. Thorne, Jr., as Earl Osmond, Mr. Robert Craig as Motley, and Miss Phillis Glover as Angela, deserve praise for their respective impersonations. Mr. Craig and Miss L. V. Davenport were very amusing in the farce of "Mr. and Mrs. Peter White." Mr. E. L. Davenport, having entirely recovered from his late severe illness, will make his first appearance on the evening of the 30th Oct. in his great impersonation of "Hamlet," which will be repeated on Nov. 1st. On Monday evening, Oct. 31st, Lee's tragedy of "Alexander, the Great," and the drama of "The Irish Emigrant" will be presented for the benefit of Mr. Charles R. Thorne, Jr. The re-appearance of Mrs. E. L. Davenport at this theatre is unavoidably postponed for a few evenings.

EDWIN CLIFFORD'S COMPANY, while performing at Green Bay, Wis., on Oct. 12th, gave the gross receipts of that performance for the relief of the sufferers by the fires in Northern Wisconsin. The receipts were $212.50.

THINGS IN CHICAGO are thus reported by our correspondent in writing on Oct. 26th:—"There is very little to write about in the way of amusement items at present, as the greater portion of our professionals have left the city in quest of fresh engagements. The Globe Theatre was opened on Saturday evening last, by the late Museum company, under the management of the veteran Colonel Wood. The comedy of 'Won at Last' and the farce of 'Who's Who' constituted the bill. The house was literally packed in the balcony and family circle and the lower portion of the house was well filled. Miss Freeman, through some strange freak, after promising to remain until a leading lady could be engaged, suddenly left the city Friday night before the performance. Miss Fanny Burt was substituted for the part of Constance, and did very well, considering she does not aspire to leading business. Miss Clara Stoneall has joined the company, and as she is known to be an excellent actress it is unnecessary to say she played Mrs. Warburton in a satisfactory manner. Emma Maddern was as pert and saucy as usual. J. C. Padgett has also been secured and, as he is a Chicago favorite, he will be a valuable acquisition. His acting of Adolphus Buchanan was all that could be desired, but was sadly marred in his endeavors to imitate a certain song and dance man. Messrs. Mortimer, Wilson, Howard, Gross and Sapphore contributed alike to the success of the piece. The farce was happily played by J. S. Langrishe, W. J. Gross, J. C. Howard, C. Wells, Miss Emma Maddern and Miss Lizzie Mahon. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings 'The Poor Gentleman' and 'The Irish Lion.' This evening and the balance of the week 'The Maid of Munster,' 'Loan of a Lover' and 'Your Life's in Danger.' 'Divorce' is underlined for an early production. Miss Blanche De Bar has been engaged for the leading business and is expected to commence on the 30th. Business has not been very brisk thus far. The Misses Mahon will remain with the company aforesaid the balance of the season..... Manager C. D. Hess has secured for the winter Harrington Hall. The hall will seat at out 1,500 people, and can easily be converted into a very neat dramatic temple. Mr. Hess intends to have it put ship-shape immediately. Several of the organizations that were to appear at Crosby's Opera House will appear at this hall. From present indications, amusements will yet flourish in the city of ashes. The Wyndham Company will probably be the first to occupy the Dearborn Hall..... McVicker will certainly build a new theatre, but the exact location is not known as yet..... The popular manager and energetic R. M. Hooley has just effected a lease for a term of 99 years of the lot on the corner of Wabash avenue and Monroe street, and intends to erect an elegant theatre, costing in the vicinity of $150,000. The lot has a frontage of 76 feet and a depth of 170 feet. The work of building will commence early in the spring, and be ready for the fall season..... Mrs. C. M. Walcott was a heavy loser by the late fire, having her entire wardrobe burned, and is unfortunately out of a situation."

FROM BALTIMORE we have the following dramatic resume, from our regular correspondent, dated Oct. 28th:—"At the Grand Opera House, Byron's play of 'Daisy Farm' was presented on Monday evening, Oct. 23d, for the first time in America. A synopsis of the principal incidents has been given in a previous issue of the CLIPPER (May 28th). It is a domestic drama in four acts; the plot is ingeniously constructed, but not laboriously intricate; the language natural, terse, with occasional flashes of wit; the characters real and standing out in bold relief from each other, and, though the general tone of the play is quiet and subdued, yet an absorbing interest is maintained throughout. Mr. J. W. Wallack, as Andrew Armstrong, the honest farmer and loving husband, gave a fine piece of pathetic acting. Mr. Harry S. Murdoch's impersonation of Charles Surridge was admirable. Every emotion of the weak minded and erring, though really good hearted young man, on the road to ruin, was carefully portrayed. Mr. L. R. Shewell, as the keen, sarcastic and benevolent Craven, was natural and effective. Miss Virginia Howard, as Bridget Armstrong, presented an excellent picture of the loving wife and too trusting mother. Mrs. Fred. Williams won the hearts of the audience by her sprightly and ingenuous acting as the faithful Cribbage, a charity girl. Miss Lizzie Anderson, as Kate Cole, rendered her part fairly. The other roles were also well performed, being distributed as follows:—Simeon Cole, Mr. G. O. Morris; Garge, Mr. H. C. Curley; Wigtail, Mr. Burton; Gamo, Mr. Rogers; Dodson, Mr. Hurst; Grahame, Mr. Shine; Mary, Mrs. Rodgers. The entire performance was almost faultless, the scenery and properties new, costly and correct. 'Daisy Farm' ran until Thursday, when 'Oliver Twist' was presented, Mr. Wallack enacting Fagin; Mr. Shewell, Bill Sikes; Mrs. Fred. Williams, Oliver Twist; Miss V. Howard, Nancy Sikes. On Friday night, Mrs. C. Richings Bernard took a benefit in the 'School for Scandal.' Saturday matinee, 'Daisy Farm;' Saturday night, benefit of Mr. Wallack, in 'Oliver Twist.' Business has been fair. On Monday, Oct. 30th, Lydia Thompson and company open with 'Blue Beard.'..... Percy Roselle began his second week at the Holliday Street Theatre, Oct. 23d, in 'The Boy Detective,' dramatized especially for him. The play is in three acts, and of the modern sensational order. The plot is good, some of the situations quite thrilling, and the language ordinary, but sprightly, and containing many hits at the topics of the day. The plot hinges principally on the hunting down of a gang of counterfeiters, and the righting of the wrongs of a woman, who finally turns up to be the boy detective's mother. Percy took five characters, viz., Butts, the boy detective; Jack Halyard, a sailor; Piggy Stubbs, a newsboy; Sir Lawrence Belvidere, a fop, and Jacob Batteraea, a boatman. His impersonation of old Batteraea was the best; as Jack Halyard, he went through a sailor's hornpipe. Master Roselle's declamation, gestures and byplay are all good, and he is rewarded by frequent applause; the only apparent fault is the drawl of his articulation. Mr. Howard, as Dick Spiftkins, a rounder, excited considerable merriment; Mr. Reiber, as Jacob Tibbald, ditto. The rest of the cast was as follows:—Sam. Perry, Mr. Hudson; Tom. Jones, Mr. Anderson; Sinker, Mr. Stone; Gus. Thompson, Mr. Stedman; Wm. Wilson, Mr. Barron; Templeton, Mr. Ward; Sam, Mr. Ober; Policeman, Mr. Hawkins; Mrs. Sinclair, Mrs. Edwards; Mattie Templeton, Mrs. Stone; Mother Cronin, Mrs. Starr. The attendance during the week has been good. Master Roselle closes Saturday, Oct. 28th. On Monday, Oct. 30th, 'Elfie; or, The Cherry Tree Inn,' will be produced."

MCKEAN BUCHANAN closed a week's season at the Quincy, Ill., Opera House on Oct. 21st. "Richelieu," "London Assurance," "Hamlet," "Macbeth," "Merchant of Venice" and "Nick of the Woods" were presented in the order named. Buchanan opened at Hannibal, Mo., on the 23d, for one week, and goes from thence through Missouri. W. J. Hurley, late of McVicker's, joined the company at Quincy.

THE JANAUSCHEK COMBINATION opened at Quincy, Ill., Oct. 30th in "Mary Stuart;" and "Deborah" will be presented the second and last night of their stay. The sale of seats for both nights commenced on Oct. 26th and the house was nearly all taken the first day. The Combination open at Jacksonville Nov. 1st, for two nigats, thence to Springfield, two nights. They return for two additional nights on Nov. 9th.

MEMBERS OF THE PROFESSION in Chicago, who suffered by the fire, it appears, from a card published in another column, have not received money sent there designed especially for their relief, and the professionals there desire all donors to send a statement of the amounts forwarded and to whom sent; and they also desire sufferers who have left the city to communicate with them.

JAMES M. WARD commenced an engagement at the Royal Lyceum, Toronto, Oct. 23d, opening in "Through by Daylight." Our corresponden', writing on Oct. 26th, says:—"Mr. Ward's acting as George Glenroy was good; Miss Emma Pierce, who was specially engaged to play Madge Morton, the concert saloon waiter girl, gave general satisfaction, especially so in her songs and banjo solos, in which she was encored two or three times each evening. Mr. Halford played the part of Arthur Comstock in good style. Miss Lonsdale was hardly up to the standard as Edith Comstock. Mr. Barton made his appearance after an absence of four weeks, and gave a natural performance of the rollicking Bowery boy, Rip Tearing Johnny. H. Wilton as Fleeshman, the Dutch concert saloon keeper, pleased as much better than in any part we have seen him in this season. Messrs. Sullvan and Riel played the parts of Rufus Appleton and Archy White, a brace of counterfeiters, well. Harry Lindley and Mrs. Bradshaw excited the risibilities of the audience as Mr. and Mrs. Corrigan. 'Through by Daylight' has drawn the best houses of the season so far, and is announced for the remainder of the week."

AT THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BUFFALO, N. Y., Johnny Thompson, in McCloskey's sensational drama of "On Hand," played to excellent business during the past week. Our correspondent, writing on Oct. 28th, says: "In this piece Mr. Thompson is afforded scope for displaying his wonderful versatility. His previous experience in the burnt cork line has, no doubt, facilitated his progress as a versatile comedian. Scenes deserving special mention are those of the club house, the drawbridge, the fire, and the closing scene of the cataract, in which real water is brought into requisition. The support was fair. Miss Annie Waite and Mr. W. H. Leake commenced a week's engagement on Monday evening, 30th, opening in 'Under the Willow.' During the week their latest specialties will be presented."

THE WALLACE SISTERS, Jennie, Minnie and Maud, supported by George K. Fortescue, and a dramatic company, are performing in the oil regions of Pennsylvania. While at Warren, recently, they gave the proceeds of their last performance to aid the Chicago sufferers. Their route ahead is Titusville and Corry.

WILSON'S BOSTON THEATRE COMPANY commenced a four weeks' season at Rockland Me., Oct. 23d.

HARRY BASCOMB, a talented actor, and a sufferer by the recent conflagration at Chicago, Ill., desires an engagement for the balance of the season, having lost nearly everything he possessed. Any manager who can make room for him in his company, will, we think, have no cause to regret it, as he is versatile and useful. He was a member of McVicker's company, and had become quite a favorite with the audiences in that city. He can be addressed at No. 21 Liverpool street, East Boston, Mass., where he is temporarily sojourning.

MYERS & HUNTLEY'S METROPOLITAN THEATRE performed in Brunswick, Me., Oct. 24th and 25th, and Bath, 26th, 27th and 28th. They are announced to play at Gardiner, Me., Oct. 31st and Nov. 1, and at Augusta the balance of the week. Mr. Roys, of the company, is dangerously sick in Lewiston. He was attacked one evening while on the stage, was taken to one of the anterooms of the hall, and it has not been possible to remove him.

GEO. F. BLACHFORD, late treasurer of the Dearborn Theatre, Chicago, advertises for an engagement with a dramatic, variety or minstrel company.

CONCERNING AMUSEMENTS IN LOUISVILLE, KY., our correspondent, writing on Oct. 26th, says:—"At Weisiger Hall the Chapman Sisters, supported by E. A. Locke and a rather inferior stock company, closed a week's engagement Oct. 21st. They played in New Albany, Ind., 23d and 24th, and the balance of the week at Nashville, Tenn. ..... Edwin Adams commenced his second and last week at the Opera House on the 23d in 'Enoch Arden.' The verdict of its excellence has been unanimous. Mr. Adams' impersonation of Enoch Arden surpassed all former efforts. The acting of Mrs. B. Macauley as Annie Leigh was marked with much ability, and was thoroughly artistic. Miss Whiting's Esther Arden was rendered in a very pleasing manner. As Philip Ray Mr. Whiting was very good; his fine stage appearance and manly bearing well suited him for the part. Reuben and Captain Sterling, by Messrs. Church and Russell, were acceptable. Miriam Lane found in Miss Crampton an excellent representative. 'Enoch Arden' holds the boards throughout the week. Audiences unusually large. Adams goes to St. Louis and the Macauley company to Cincinnati. The Three Hunchbacks' will be the attraction at the Opera House Oct. 30th and continues during the week..... Lisa Weber and her burlesque troupe opened at Weisiger Hall on the 23d in 'Ernani,' to a rather slim house. Tuesday evening 'Lurline' was produced, and the business picked up a little. 'Little Mephistopheles' was the closing bill, and although well played it failed to draw. The party go from here to Terre Haute, Ind., for three nights."

MANAGERS and others desirous of producing "The Old Flag," are requested to address E. A. Lewis, as per advertisement.

JERVIS VINCENT, late of the Wyndham Comedy Company, having lost his wardrobe and effects by the Chicago fire, returns to Europe immediately, but he will return in about twelve weeks, and can be addressed through Col. T. A. Brown's agency.

Musical.

SIGNOR VALLO says that the public frequently complain of a want of soul in singers; but, in most cases, it is a lack of soul in the public themselves.

EDWARD STANLEY and Mrs. Kitty Angell, both of Spaulding's Ball Runners, were united in marriage at Bloomfield, Me., Oct. 14th.

THE BERGEN FAMILY, Swiss Bell Ringers, and Sol Smith Russell, humorist, performed at Paris, Ky., Oct. 25th and 26th; Lexington, 27th and 28th, and are billed ahead as follows:—Frankfort, 30th and 31st; Jeffersonville, Ind., Nov. 1st; Lebanon, 2d and 3d, and Danville, 4th and 5th. Miss Nellie Knapp joined the company Oct. 23d.

A LEADER OF ORCHESTRA, who can play first violin and tenor horn, is wanted for Dupree & Benedict's Minstrels. Address as per advertisement in another column.

THE HUTCHINSON FAMILY, tribe of Asa, sang at Portsmouth, N. H., on the 24th of Oct., to a crowded house.

AMERICUS, the infant violinist, who recently made a successful appearance at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, can be engaged through J. G. Speaight, whose address is in another column.

M. H. WILKINSON, clarionet player, advertises for an engagement.

NED F. CAMPBELL, baritone singer, and P. Morris, tenor, who advertise, are prepared to accept engagements.

THEODORE THOMAS' orchestra gave three performances at Weisiger Hall, in Louisville, Ky., Oct. 26th, 27th and 28th.

CONCERTS HAVE BEEN GIVEN at Toronto, Ont., every evening during the past week, in the Bayview Gardens, in aid of the Chicago sufferers, and also a concert in the Music Hall on Thursday evening for the same purpose. All of them have been well attended, and the proceeds must have netted a handsome sum.

CHAS. DOTZLER, leader of orchestra, late of King's Opera House, Chicago, advertises that he can be engaged.

MAS. MOULTON gave a concert at Allyn Hall, Hartford, Conn., Oct. 26th, assisted by Brookhouse Bowler and Webb, the pianist. The house was very fairly filled.

C. JACOB, flute and cornet player, late of Hooley's Opera House, Chicago, advertises for an engagement.

THE ADY CONCERT TROUPE performed at Akron, O., Oct. 24th, thence to Canton, Mansfield, and Sandusky.

PROF. CRUICKSHILL is announced to give an entertainment at Harrisburg, Pa., Nov. 7th, for the benefit of the Chicago sufferers. He will be assisted by Fred. Knoche and Miss Vaughn, pianists; P. Brucknall and Mr. Lew. Kelter, tenors; Miss Maggie Barnitz and Mrs. R. S. Smith, sopranos; Miss Kate Zollinger and Miss Kate Roberts, contraltos, and Mr. John Greer and Mr. Geo. Grosbasson. As the entertainment is to be given for charitable purposes, and the performers amongst the best of home talent, a grand time is anticipated.

THE PAREPA-ROSA OPERA TROUPE inaugurated their season at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, on Oct. 30th. During the week, notwithstanding the counter attraction elsewhere, and the rainy weather, the attendance was good. "The Daughter of the Regiment," "The Bohemian Girl," "Maritana," "Lucretia Borgia," "Martha" and "Satanella" comprised the repertoire of the week, which was marked by the debut in Philadelphia of Clara Doria on the 24th Oct., and of Mme. Vanzini on the 28th. The season closes November 4th.

PROF. THOMAS H. HIMROD, of the Syracuse Conservatory of Music, announces that he will produce his beautiful spectacular fairy opera, entitled "Christmas," at Wieting Opera House during the latter part of December. This opera was brought out quite successfully at the same place last winter, and as several talented vocalists from Central New York, and also of New York city, will assist at its reproduction, no doubt it will be a decided musical event in that section.

THE MENDELSSOHN QUINTETTE CLUB, assisted by Mrs. J. W. Weston, vocalist, will give a concert at Quincy, Ill., on Nov. 13th.

SIGNOR NICOLAO gave an operatic concert at the Newark, N. J., Opera House, Oct. 23d, upon which occasion Miss Mattie Lynch, pupil of Sig. Nicolao, made her debut as an operatic singer. A small audience was in attendance and the performance not as successful as it should have been..... Mr. John Savage, baritone of St. John's Church, gave a concert on Oct. 25th at the Opera House before a fair audience. On account of the bad state of the weather a number of the performers failed to put in an appearance. However, the performance given was first-class, and reflects credit on this rising young artist. So wrote our correspondent, Oct. 28th.

THE HYERS SISTERS (colored), assisted by Jos. Le Count (colored), concertised at the Opera House, Detroit, Oct. 23d and 24th, to a light attendance. Their pianist was not good, never keeping time with the singers. Le Count, who has a fair baritone voice, was flat in the upper register. The sisters are good but inexperienced. They have been engaged by Yankee Robinson for his concert troupe which he is organizing here for the winter season..... Rosa d'Erina is announced to give two concerts at the Opera House Oct. 30th and 31st, for the benefit of the Michigan sufferers. She is arranging for concerts in Canada, taking in the principal towns on the Great Western R. R.

MLLE. LOUISE LICHTMAY and Theo. Habelman's German Opera Company performed "Il Troubadour" at Klein's Opera House, Scranton, Pa., on Oct. 23d, and "Martha" on the 24th. The audiences were hardly in accordance with the merits of the operas or the artists. They return to Scranton two nights this week..... The different German singing societies of Scranton gave a concert at Klein's Opera House, Oct. 27th, which netted over $600 for the Chicago Relief Fund. They give another this week.

THE STRAKOSCH ITALIAN OPERA COMPANY appeared at the Brooklyn Academy Oct. 26th in "Favorita" to a slimly attended house.

THE CONCERT given at Knoxville, Tenn., by home talent recently, for the benefit of the Chicago sufferers, netted $152.

To Managers, Agents, Doorkeepers and Others.

Every regularly authorized correspondent of the NEW YORK CLIPPER is supplied with the necessary credentials, in the shape of a card, with an engraving of the CLIPPER Building on one side, and on the other the name of the correspondent, city, etc., signed by the proprietor of the paper, with the stamp of the office, and date of Sept. 1st, 1871, affixed thereto, each card running for six months, when new ones will be issued on the return of the old, but one representative being recognized in each place. We particularly request that managers of entertainments will decline extending favors to any person representing himself as correspondent of this paper who cannot produce the card referred to. By acceding to this request, managers will not be imposed on by irresponsible parties. Cards are only issued to correspondents of the amusement department of this paper. Parties applying for the position of correspondent are respectfully requested to consider silence a negative.

MEMBERS OF THE PROFESSION who suffered by the late conflagration in Chicago, Ill., who may desire to advertise for engagements, are informed that the advertising columns of the CLIPPER are open to them free of all charge.

A FEMALE CLOG DANCER and other artists are wanted by P. C., who advertises.

TOM WILLIAMS, banjo soloist, end man, &c., advertises for an engagement.

PROF. ALEXANDRIA, who can be addressed care of CLIPPER office, wants a female partner for trapeze business.

CHAS. GARDNER, song and dance artist, commences a two weeks' engagement at Wild's Opera House, Syracuse, N. Y., on Oct. 30th.

SHERLEY'S COMIQUE, judging by the immense houses in attendance, may be pronounced one of the institutions of Buffalo, N. Y. On Oct. 23d the new faces were the Misses Lottie and Lulu Wentworth and Augusta Lamereaux. The minstrel scene is still retained for the first part, in which the Misses Lamereaux and Nagle give their popular ballads. In the olio, Miss Lottie Wentworth gives a sentimental song and dance with much skill; Miss Lulu Wentworth picks the banjo in a masterly manner; Miss Lamereaux's changes, a la Lingard, are given with credit, and Mr. Franks convulses the audience by his ludicrous caricatures. The balance of the company remain as heretofore reported. Miss Williams' songs and dances may be mentioned favorably. The "Burlesque Circus" and the "Darktown Fair," by Shelby, Hart, Miller and Miss Nagle, were rendered in a comical manner. The "Female Swimmers," although a good card, was withdrawn on the 21st, and the sketch of "Pap and Paregoric" substituted on the 23d. Manager Shelby is bound to give his patrons variety, and the limit of two weeks is fixed for the duration of any one piece. Sidney Frank concludes his engagement to-night. Hezer Hurdis, styled the "Flying Man of the Air," and Mr. Oscar Willis, negro comedian, will put in an appearance on Monday evening, Oct. 30th. So wrote our correspondent on Oct. 26th.

AT THE THEATRE COMIQUE, Bay City, Mich., the new faces are:—Miss Carrie Bunnell, Julia Emmons, Annie West, Harry Wharfe, J. H. Clarke and Master Johnny, a pleasing song and dance artist and comedian, only ten years old. Belle Iferd, Lou Rainford and the Dormer Sisters appeared on the 26th. The sensation of the week was Dibolo, the fire king, who closed a successful engagement on the evening of the 25th, receiving a testimonial benefit. He was to open at Smith's Opera House, East Saginaw, on the 26th of Oct., for three nights, and thence goes to Oshkosh, Wis.

AT DEAGLE'S, St. Louis, Mo., there has been nothing new in the way of variety talent. The performers are Woods, Cotton, and Archer, Constantine, Farren, Baker, and others. Eli a Wesner in her specialties is a marked success, being nightly received with uproarious applause. The "Ticket-of-Leave Man" was well rendered by the cast, which is the best that has been in this house for several seasons. George Thompson as Robert Brierly gave the part in a thoroughly competent manner, being peculiarly adapted to the role. Hi Chapman as Hawkshaw was at home, as were also Stanton and Lampee. Probably one of the most successful hits in the piece is Miss Ella Wesner as Sam Willoughby. She acted the part in an off hand, ready manner, and gushed for herself much praise. Rapid progress is being made toward the production of a new spectacular drama. Business generally good this week..... At Carroll's a varied bill has been given. Armstrong and Walters hold their own in their acts, while Milan and Gilroy still remain favorites. Nothing particularly new. The "Cancan a la Mabille" concludes the nightly performance, combining in its strength the great number of performers. So wrote our correspondent on Oct. 27th.

THE METROPOLITAN THEATRE, Springfield, Ill., has been doing a very good business during the week past. Johnny Bucklin does a clever song and dance, and is good in the first part, on the tambourine end. Frank Steele, with the bones and in his banjo acts, is immense; his cow bell solos were well received. Curtis and Gardner do well in their respective parts. Miss May Barron, vocalist and comedian, made her first appearance Oct. 26th, and many friends and admirers. Maud De Lisle commenced an engagement Oct. 27th. Billy Talkenstein, pianist, left this company after having drawn considerable money in advance, without any notice whatever. The orchestra, under Prof. Schultz, has been increased. So wrote our correspondent, Oct. 27th.

AGNES SUTHERLAND, vocalist; Kittie Le Roy, jig dancer, closed an engagement at the St. James Theatre, Boston, on Oct. 28th, and they can be addressed through Col. T. A. Brown's agency. The Boston press thus notices these ladies:—

The recent acquisitions in the higher order of jig dance and vocalism, dismal characters by Miss Kitty Le Roy and Miss Sutherland, have added much during the past weeks to the peculiary interests of the St. James Theatre.

FAN LEROY, dancer and Ethiopian comedian, advertises that he can be engaged.

LEON DE FORREST, gymnast, whose address is in another column, wants a female partner.

HOMER LANE, wrestler, and Jimmy Welch, Irish and Dutch comedian, advertise that they can be engaged for the wrestling act and specialties.

FIRST CLASS TALENT for a new theatre, now being completed in Thirty-fourth street, this city. See advertisement.

FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE MICHIGAN SUFFERERS the matinee given at the Opera House, Detroit, Oct. 21st, by Manager Welsh's Comique company, was a great success, the house being very large. Each performer enacted his or her role admirably. The Brunell Sisters, who volunteered on this occasion only, met with a hearty reception, being old favorites..... The only new face at the Theatre Comique was Charles Adams, song and dance artist. The Clair Sisters left for Toledo, O. Jennie Benson, little Lillie Benson and the Weston Sisters are underlined for an early appearance. The house each night is crowded.

TALENT is wanted for the New American Theatre, Baltimore, Md. See advertisement.

VARIETY ARTISTS and a juvenile man are wanted for the Opera House, Grand Rapids, Mich. Address the manager, as per card elsewhere.

A LADY VOCALIST and danseuse are wanted by George W. Watson, who advertises.

LON CHAPIN'S VARIETY THEATRE, Scranton, Pa., has done a good business the past week. The manager reappeared upon the stage, after a long absence, on Monday evening, and was happily received. Miss Kate Brooks and Master George Brooks, have established themselves as favorites, as has also Miss Ada Stewart, one of the best female clogdists ever seen. Alf. Mied and Frank Carlton are retained, as are also Victoria Ross and the regular company. The new faces announced are Mlle Celestine, danseuse, Miss Bella Lewis and J. H. Ashton.

FLORA AND MARIE WESTON, Billy St. George and Edwin Gibbons, made their first appearance at the Theatre Comique, Cleveland, O., on the 23d, and the Hollis Sisters appeared on the 26th. This place has one of the largest variety companies in the west, being twenty-five in number, embracing song and dance artists, Ethiopian comedians, and a full corps de ballet.

HOOLEY'S OPERA HOUSE, in Brooklyn, was run last week under the management of Fred. Aiken, the company including Mr. Ben Wheeler, Miss Emma Courcey, Frank Donaldson, Dick Sands, Virginia Smith, Tommy Sully, John E. Lane, Master Bennie, Little Vic, Charley Brown, Mlle Terratella, Hannah Birch and Geo. Herman.

THE LAURI FAMILY open at the Brooklyn Olympic on Oct. 30th for a week's engagement, the bill including their special performances and those of the regular Olympian olio, which includes the female minstrels and Arcnic Hughes. With the Lauris is Herr Alvan, "the Hero of Strasburg." Whalley drew well in "Napoleon's Old Guard" at the Olympic last week.

MISS ANNIE HINDLE, character songs with changes; Barney Reynolds, Ethiopian comedian; and Nellie Love's burlesque company, in "Cinderella," were the principal attractions at Berry's Theatre Comique, Wilkesbarre, Pa., during the past week. Across the business was reported good. Andy Shower, Billy Chambers, Billy Worrell and Mlle Ledia are announced for this week.

DIBOLO, the fire king, is performing at Smith's Opera House, East Saginaw, Mich. His business is immense. He eats red-hot coals, drinks boiling brandy, bites off melted sealing wax and swallows melted lead. He has only a three nights' engagement, but will probably return in a week. Stanley and Fitzgerald close their engagement Saturday, and start for Syracuse, N. Y., Monday, Oct. 30th, to replenish their wardrobe that was destroyed by the Chicago fire. Belle Iferd closed her engagement and went to Bay City on the 26th. She is an excellent card. Jenny Banks, jig danseuse and comic vocalist, opened Monday evening, 23d, to a good audience. Ella Wesner is billed to appear Nov. 6th. A feature of the week was the Female Parlor Minstrels. It took well. George Kurtz favored the audience with an excellent original song, on the action of the Board of Aldermen of the city, who were not favorably inclined towards allowing Smith to give his complimentary matinee for the benefit of the fire sufferers. So wrote our correspondent on Oct. 27th.

AT THE VARIETIES, Peoria, Ill., the past week, several new faces have made their appearance. Mr. Harry Thompson retires from the stage management and goes to Springfield, Ill., to open at the Metropolitan, on the 30th, and is succeeded by Messrs. Bowman and Harris from Chicago, who made their first appearance Oct. 26th. Mr. Dan Hart, the Ir

TO THEATRICAL MANAGERS.—I wish to warn you against one GEO. A. BAILEY, who has committed himself disgracefully in his transactions with me. Coming to me friendless and penniless last season, I befriended him, and under his word of honor that he would stay with me the present season at a stated salary, if I would keep him through the summer months, I did so. During a one week's engagement of my company at Nashville, this ungrateful fellow sent in his resignation without giving me as much as one day's notice, and his name is on the bill. Let managers look out for him if they would not be disappointed.
